Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total amount of public moneys given towards the cost of renovation and conservation of listed industrial buildings in each of the past 10 years; what was the average amount of financial assistance given in such cases; of these, how many were owned by private parties; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 20 July 1993]: The total amount of money given by the Secretary of State for Scotland for the repair of listed industrial buildings—including those converted for other uses—under the historic buildings grant scheme in each of the past 10 years is set out in the table. This represents assistance to 29 buildings, of which 28 were privately owned, the majority by charitable bodies. The average amount of financial assistance given in such cases under the grant scheme was £109,716.

Total amount of historic buildings repair grant

Year	£
1984-85	128,600
1985-86	134,455
1986-87	13,500
1987-88	124,582
1988-89	790,147
1989-90	400,259
1990-91	473,605
1991-92	561,980
1992-93	396,150

Housing Associations

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the proportion of tenants in the public housing sector who live in housing association apartments and houses (a) in Strathclyde and (b) Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 July 1993]: The information requested is published in the 1991 census report for Scotland, part 1, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the average levels of income of housing association tenants in each year since 1987.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 July 1993]: This information is not generaly collected centrally, but the socio-economic study carried out as part of the Scottish house condition survey showed that, in 1991, the mean income of housing association tenants was £6,300. This information is contained in table 4.11 of the survey report, which was published on 20 July and a copy is available in the Library.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to create a post of housing association ombudsman.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 July 1993]: I have asked Scottish Homes to prepare proposals for a housing association ombudsman service and it is currently undertaking a consultation exercise on this matter.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the proportion of private sector loan funding which will be required to maintain housing association new construction programmes and renovation progammes in 1993-94 and 1995-96; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 July 1993]: In the current year, Scottish Homes is confident of achieving the target set by my right hon. Friend of a private: public leverage rate of 1:2 for its programme as a whole. It is too early to say what the target will be for the future years.

Sewage Sludge

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance he has given to regional councils concerning the proposed abolition of the dumping at sea of sewage sludge under EC rules.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 20 July 1993]: Regional councils were advised in March 1990 of the Government's decision to terminate the sea disposal of sewage sludge by the end of 1998. At the same time Lothian and Strathclyde regional councils were also advised of changes in the arrangements relating to their annual applications for licences under the provisions of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 which would prevail in the period to 1998.

Since then my officials have been in routine contact with the regional councils as they have developed their sludge strategies for post-1998.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Coal

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what protection he intends to introduce for the domestic coal consumer in Northern Ireland after the proposed privatisation of British Coal; and what proportion of homes in Northern Ireland depend on coal as a main source of heat;

(2) what safeguards he will introduce to ensure that the households in Northern Ireland which use coal as their main source of heat are not exploited by monopolies following the proposed privatisation of British Coal; and how many households in Northern Ireland use coal as their main source of heat.

Mr. Atkins: Suppliers of coal to households in Northern Ireland are subject to the provisions of the Fair Trading Act 1973 and will continue to be so. Approximately 321,000 households in Northern Ireland —61 per cent. of the total—use coal as their main source of heat.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he proposes to take to ensure that elderly people with coal as their primary source of heat are not disadvantaged under the proposed privatisation of British Coal.

Mr. Atkins: The Government's proposals to help secure the future of the coal industry should lead to a more efficient industry producing coal at reduced costs, thus benefiting all coal users.

Tourism

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many tourists from the Republic of Ireland visited the north during 1991 and 1992; what plans his Department has to increase the numbers of tourists from both Britain and the Republic of Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: A total of 380,000 tourists from the Republic of Ireland visited Northern Ireland in 1991 and 352,000 in 1992. A major drive to increase visitors from Britain and the Republic of Ireland was launched in March with the Northern Ireland tourist board's biggest ever television advertising campaign, "The Northern Ireland you'll never know unless you go", at a cost of £1 million. This has been very well received and is backed up strongly by other marketing activity.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the effect of the numbers of tourists from the United States of America visiting Northern Ireland since the new operation of a direct, scheduled service between New York and Belfast; what steps his Department is now taking to market Northern Ireland in the United States of America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The new direct scheduled air service between Belfast and New York came into operation on 3 June 1993 and it is too early for meaningful statistical information to have been collected on its effect on the number of tourists visiting Northern Ireland. The Northern Ireland tourist board continues, through its New York office, to participate in a wide range of marketing activities aimed at attracting American visitors, including selective advertising campaigns, participation in consumer and trade exhibitions, development of special interest tour operators and joint marketing initiatives in liaison with Bord Failte, the tourist authority for the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what applications his Department has received from companies wishing to operate a direct scheduled air service between Northern Ireland and Germany; what studies his Department has made of the benefits to the north's tourist industry which the operation of this and other direct scheduled services might have; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: No application has been brought to my attention for a direct scheduled air service between Northern Ireland and Germany. Tourism would undoubtedly benefit from a direct scheduled service link with a key tourism market like Germany.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of tourism in Northern Ireland in 1992-93 came from (a) domestic and (b) overseas sources; and how many of that total were categorised as (i) short stay and (ii) long stay.

Mr. Atkins: In the calendar year 1992, domestic sources formed 32 per cent. of total tourism in Northern Ireland of which 63 per cent. were categorised as short stay and 37 per cent. as long stay. Overseas sources for 1992 formed 68 per cent. of the visitor total, of which 48 per cent. were categorised as short stay and 52 per cent. as long stay visitors.

Salmon and Grilse

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) salmon and (b) grilse were taken by drift nets in (i) the Foyle fisheries area and (ii) the fisheries conservancy area in each of the last 10 years; what was the average weight of each category of fish; and how many fish in each category were taken by fishermen resident in Northern Ireland and in the Irish Republic.

Mr. Ancram: Commercial salmon catch returns do not differentiate between salmon and grilse. The total drift net catch, and average weight of fish, for the areas within the jurisdiction of the Foyle Fisheries Commission and the Fisheries Conservancy Board for Northern Ireland respectively are as follows:

	Foyle Fisheries Commission		Fisheries Conservancy Board for Northern Ireland
1984	18,299	2·94	662	3·12
1985	24,528	3·39	1,010	3·33
1986	32,280	3·34	479	3·15
1987	12,587	2·91	248	3·18
1988	17,321	3·21	675	3·09

	Foyle Fisheries Commission		Fisheries Conservancy Board for Northern Ireland
	Number	Average weight (kgs)	Number	Average weight (kgs)
1989	55,108	3·14	812	3·17
1990	33,850	3·14	252	3·03
1992	33,321	2·98	2,267	3·08

Information on the number of fish taken by fishermen resident in Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland respectively is not available but for statistical purposes it is established practice to include 50 per cent. of the catch in the Foyle area, in addition to all of the Fisheries Conservancy Board catch, when computing the total Northern Ireland catch.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) salmon and (b) grilse were taken by each type of net in Northern Ireland fisheries in each of the last 10 years; and how many such fish were taken by anglers in the same years; and what sums were paid in licence fees in each of those years by (i) netsmen and (ii) anglers.

Mr. Ancram: Salmon catch returns do not differentiate between salmon and grilse. Total commercial catches—inclusive of 50 per cent. of the catches in the Foyle area—by type of net, were as follows:

	Drift nets	Draft nets	Fixed engines
1983	34,058	8,260	14,425
1984	9,812	5,695	13,077
1985	13,274	7,433	8,908
1986	16,619	6,381	12,064
1987	6,541	2,786	10,808
1988	9,335	8,202	13,389
1989	28,366	15,619	17,529
1990	17,177	5,112	10,135
1992	18,927	4,515	7,696

Accurate information on angling catches is not available. Anglers are not required to make returns in the Fisheries Conservancy Board's area, but such information as is available is published in the board's annual reports. A very low percentage of anglers make the required returns in the Foyle Fisheries Commission area, with reported angling catches and the percentage of licensed anglers who made the following returns.

Year	Angling catches	Percentage return
1984	379	15
1986	1,172	8
1988	960	5
1989	975	6
1990	927	4

Licence fees paid by commercial salmon fishermen and anglers respectively to the Foyle Fisheries Commission and the Fisheries Conservancy Board were as follows:

Year	Foyle Fisheries Commission[1]		Fisheries Conservancy Board
	Angling licences	Commercial fishing licences	Angling licences	Commercial fishing licences

Rate Collection

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many ratepayers have been threatened with prosecution as a result of the Rate Collection Agency computer at Newtownabbey, County Antrim being unable correctly to record more than one direct debit from an individual bank account; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Rate collection operational matters are the responsibility of Mr. David Gallagher, chief executive of the Rate Collection Agency. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. D. Gallagher to Mr. Roy Beggs, dated 20 July 1993:

I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question about the number of ratepayers threatened with prosecution as a result of the Rate Collection Agency computer being unable to record more than one direct debit from an individual bank account.

This is the only occasion on which any indication of a relationship between the unavailability of the direct debit payment facility and the threat of prosecution has come to my attention.

It is indeed correct that the Agency's existing computer system limits offering the use of the direct debit payment method to those ratepayers who pay rates for one property from one bank account. The structure of the computer system meant that it was not cost effective to avoid this limitation when introducing the direct debit payment facility in 1989 and it has been our practice to identify this fact in all Agency promotional material for direct debit. I enclose for your information a copy of our 1993-94 leaflet where you will find the relevant reference at the bottom of page 4.

The existing computer system is rapidly approaching the end of its useful life and the Agency at present is developing a replacement system which when operational in 1995 will facilitate the widest use of direct debit.

There is no reason however, why any ratepayer should be threatened with prosecution for non-payment because direct debit is not available to them. Such ratepayers are offered the Bank Standing Order facility or another payment method suitable to them.

I hope this will clarify the situation but should you wish me to investigate an individual case please let me know.

EC Structural Funds

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the persons and bodies to whom he sent his proposals for the EC structural funds.

Sir John Wheeler: The list of bodies and individuals who have been sent the consultation draft of the key sections of the Northern Ireland structural funds plan to date are set out in the table. It includes Members of the European Parliament and the main Northern Ireland party leaders, the district councils, the Confederation of British Industry, the voluntary sector and other representative bodies as well as a number of organisations and individuals who have expressed an interest in the EC structural funds after 1993. I am arranging for all Northern Ireland Members of Parliament to receive a copy of the plan because of the interest which has been shown in it and in addition for copies of the plan to be placed in the parliamentary Library. Copies of the plan are also made available to any organisation or individual who requests it.

Terrorism

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many terrorist attacks have been carried out in Northern Ireland in each year since 1969; and what percentage of these attacks were carried out by the Republican paramilitaries and Loyalist paramilitaries.

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 13 July 1993]: The available information on the number of terrorist attacks is published in the chief constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary's annual report 1992, a copy of which is in the Library. This gives details of the number of terrorist incidents involving shootings, bombs and incendiaries. Information on how many of these were attributed to Republican and Loyalist terrorist groups is not available.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total cost of the film for television screening which is part of the new campaign against terrorism; how long the film lasts; how many firms were invited to tender for the preparations of this film; and what is the budget allocated for the television screening of this film.

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 19 July 1993]: The total production cost of the three television commercial films launched on Wednesday 7 July was £438,000. The three films last 150, 80 and 40 seconds respectively. Seven advertising agencies were invited to submit proposals for this advertising campaign. The projected expenditure for screening the films in the 1993-94 financial year is £280,000.

ENVIRONMENT

Council Tax

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what figures are available for the impact of the introduction of the council tax on pensioners, in particular in London.

Mr. Baldry: It is estimated that, after allowing for council tax benefit, about 65 per cent. of pensioner households are better off under the council tax in 1993-94 than they were under the community charge in 1992-93. The corresponding figure for London is 50 per cent. Figures for the other regions are shown in the table.

Pensioner households: Percentage gaining from the council tax

Region	Percentage of pensioner households gaining
North	75
Yorks and Humberside	70
North-West	70

Region	Percentage of pensioner households gaining
East Midlands	75
West Midlands	75
East Anglia	70
Greater London	50
Rest of South-East	55
England	65

Notes:
1. Figures estimated from the Family Expenditure Survey.
2. Figures include the effect of council tax benefit.
3. Figures are subject to sampling error and have been rounded to the nearest. 5 per cent.
4. A pensioner household is defined as a household including a man aged 65+ or a woman aged 60+.

Drinking Water

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what proportion of drinking water inspectorate reports have been released to the public during the last three years;

(2) pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith) of 12 July, Official Report, column 325, if he will indicate the criteria which are used to establish whether a drinking water inspectorate report reveals issues of general interest or provides lessons to be learnt.

Mr. Yeo: Since the drinking water inspectorate was established on 2 January 1990 it has investigated 127 incidents affecting drinking water quality and made public three reports. In all other cases copies of letters addressed to water companies summarising the inspectorate's conclusions and recommendations have been sent to the local authorities, district health authorities and customer services committees concerned, to the Office of Water Services and others who have expressed an interest. Whether or not reports need to be published is decided against the criteria given in my answer to the hon. Member on 12 July at column 325.

Tyre Dump Fires

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements are being assessed by his Department to cope with tyre dump fires; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The responsibility for making provision for fire-fighting rests with fire authorities.

In addition, waste disposal authorities are responsible for licensing the deposit of waste under the Control of Pollution Act 1974. Depositing waste tyres without a licence is an offence. A disposal authority may reject a licence application or revoke a licence on grounds of water pollution or danger to public health. Licences are issued subject to conditions, which may include requirements as to the precautions to be taken at the site. Disposal authorities are responsible for enforcing licences. These powers and duties are to be strengthened and extended when the waste management licensing provisions of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 are brought into force.

Personnel Statistics

Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total number of personnel employed in (a) the National Rivers Authority, (b) the drinking water inspectorate, (c) Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and (d) the Office of Water Services.

Mr. Yeo: The current totals of staff in post are as follows:

	Number of staff
National Rivers Authority	8,371
The drinking water inspectorate	28
Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution	358
Ofwat	163

Running Costs

Mr. Michael Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest annual running costs for which figures are available for (a) the National Rivers Authority, (b) the drinking water inspectorate, (c) Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and (d) Ofwat.

Mr. Yeo: The costs are broadly as follows:

	1992-93 Total revenue costs (£ million)
National Rivers Authority	283·6
The drinking water inspectorate	1·3
Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution	14·5
Ofwat	6·7

Further details can be found in the annual reports and accounts of NRA, HMIP and Ofwat.

Mineral Reviews

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward proposals to amend section 105 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 to ensure five-year reviews of all mineral permissions in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave on 17 June 1993 at column 675.

Bathing Water

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out, in tabular form, how many waters, in each of the EC countries, failed to meet their obligations under the bathing water directive; how many met the mandatory water quality standard; and how many complied with the directive's guideline standards.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 19 July 1993]: Drawing from the latest EC report, "Quality of Bathing Water 1992", the details of compliance with the coliform standards for seawater bathing areas are as follows:

Country	Failing mandatory standards	Meeting standards: Mandatory	Meeting standards: Guideline
Belgium	4	35	7
Denmark	60	1,113	1,009
Germany	119	328	257

Country	Failing mandatory standards	Meeting standards Mandatory	Meeting standards Guideline
Greece	38	1,165	1,141
Spain	96	1,239	988
France	413	1,519	1,121
Ireland	5	85	77
Italy	342	3,691	3,428
Netherlands	6	38	32
Portugal	38	188	170
United Kingdom	97	358	163

The Commission accepts that there is a degree of imprecision in the results from the different countries, which arises from differences in analytical methods.

Sea Walls

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what work the interdepartmental group on coastal policy has done on the ownership of sea walls; and what plans his Department has to transfer ownership of the Portland harbour wall.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 20 July 1993]: I have been asked to reply as this Department has overall policy responsibility for coastal defences in England. The ownership of specific lengths of sea wall is a matter for local bodies concerned. In the case of Portland I understand that the Ministry of Defence is reviewing options for the future of the entire base—including the breakwaters—in conjunction with Weymouth and Portland borough council and other interested parties.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Child Labour

16. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he is taking to restrict the import of goods produced by child labour.

Mr. McLoughlin: None. Open international trade is more likely to put an end to child labour by strengthening the economies of the countries concerned. There would, in any case, be severe practical difficulties in identifying goods which had been produced with child labour.

Manufacturing Industry

17. Sir David Knox: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he next expects to meet the President of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss manufacturing industry.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend and I maintain close contact with the CBI and discuss with it a wide range of issues including the competitiveness of British manufacturing industry.

36. Mr. John Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last met the Trades Union Congress to discuss manufacturing industry.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend discusses matters affecting industry with the TUC as appropriate.

Competitiveness

18. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what new plans he has to increase the competitiveness of British industry.

Mr. Sainsbury: The competitiveness of British industry is at the heart of all the Government's policies.

One-stop Shops

19. Mr. Spring: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many one-stop shops he expects to be running by the end of the year.

Mr. McLoughlin: Nineteen one-stop shops are due to open by the end of this year.

21. Sir Anthony Durant: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress has been made on the one-stop shop initiative; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Good progress is being made by the six one-stop shop pilots, and they have now been joined by two more areas, Leicestershire and Shropshire. This will represent some 31 outlets in all.

Further applications will be welcomed from other areas ready to achieve the high standards of the pilots. They will all be known as Business Links.

Defence-related Industries

20. Mr. Clelland: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what further plans his Department has to assist firms in defence-related industries to diversify into new products; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department will continue to provide advice on diversification through the "Changing Tack" regional seminar programme and associated help manual. In addition, areas which are adversely affected by defence changes may be able to benefit from the EC KONVER initiative, which will be worth some £15 million to the United Kingdom as a whole.

Deregulation

22. Mrs. Lait: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will ensure that the small business sector is fully involved in consultations on his deregulation initiative.

24. Mr. Clappison: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to ensure that due weight is given to the voice of small businesses during his consultations on the deregulation initiative.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The cumulative burden of regulation bears most heavily on small businesses and ensuring that they are fully consulted is a central objective of the deregulation initiative. The chairmen of the deregulation task forces have taken on the responsibility for giving special consideration to the needs of small businesses and the 14 task force members representing the small company sector have formed a committee to make specific recommendations.

Following the Prime Minister's meeting on deregulation yesterday, Ministers have committed themselves to greater efforts to involve small companies in Government decision making and to analysing the impact of regulatory proposals on the smallest firms affected. The enforcer's code on helping business comply with regulation, also announced yesterday, will be particularly helpful to small companies.

33. Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made as to the number of rules and regulations from (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Europe which will be amended or abolished by the deregulation unit in the next six months.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: At the Prime Minister's progress meeting on deregulation, held yesterday, Ministers agreed a list of specific deregulatory prospects to reduce the burden on businesss. The deregulation unit is a division within my Department which co-ordinates Government action on deregulation, but has no powers itself to amend or abolish regulations created either in Whitehall or the EC.

Pit Closures

23. Mr. Hanson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last met the chairman of British Coal to discuss the effect of pit closures in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend and I meet the chairman of British Coal as necessary to discuss a range of issues.

Inward Investment

25. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many jobs were created or retained as a result of inward investment into the United Kingdom in 1992.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department's Invest in Britain Bureau's—IBB—recent annual report, a copy of which is in the Library, shows that some 56,471 jobs were created or retained between 1 April 1992 and 31 March 1993. The figures are based on information provided by the companies at the time of the announcement to invest. There is no requirement to notify the Department and so the figures include only those projects where the IBB and its regional partners were involved or which have come to their notice.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many jobs he estimates have come from inward investment since 1979 and in which main areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Since 1979 it is estimated that 526,000 jobs have been associated with inward investment decisions. The largest number of jobs have been in Scotland, 16·5 per cent.; West Midlands, 14·6 per cent.; and Wales, 14·1 per cent. The figures are based on information provided by the companies at the time of the announcement to invest. There is no requirement to notify the Department and so the figures include only those projects where the IBB and its regional partners were involved or which have come to their notice.

Package Holidays

26. Mr. Graham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what further steps he is taking to ensure improved safety standards for package holidaymakers using European hotels.

Mr. McLoughlin: As a result of an EC resolution on fire safety in hotels most member states now have standards similar in general terms to those in the United Kingdom. More generally, the International Federation of Tour Operators has issued two substantial guides, one for operators and the other for owners of holiday accommodation, covering every aspect of safety from fire doors to the depth of swimming pools. These, I believe, will be valuable.

31. Dr. Godman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what further representations he has had from travel businesses about deficiencies in the package travel regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have received no such representations.

Opencast Mining

27. Mr. Enright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent discussions he has held with British Coal on opencasting.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend and I meet regularly with British Coal to discuss a wide range of issues.

Lonrho plc

28. Mr. Dickens: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received calling for an investigation into the affairs of Lonrho plc.

Mr. Sainsbury: I am unable to discuss the affairs of individual companies. However, any representations my hon. Friend cares to make regarding the affairs of Lonrho plc will be considered.

Aerospace Industry

29. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if his Department is now in a position to publish its own assessment of the prospects for the British aerospace industry.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department maintains a close dialogue with the aerospace industry on its prospects, but I have no present plans to publish any departmental assessment.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

30. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the terms of reference of Sir Peter Levene's inquiry into the ECGD.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the second part of the answer my hon. Friend the Minister for Trade gave on 7 June 1993 at column 160.

Mr. Davidson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, what criteria are taken into account when assessing staffing requirements at the ECGD.

Mr. Sainsbury: ECGD's staffing levels are periodically reviewed. They are set with the aim of ensuring that the Department has sufficient resources to meet its objectives.

Renewable Energy

34. Mr. Hoon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when his Department plans to publish its renewable energy strategy document.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today to my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, North-East (Mr. Moss).

Russia (Trade)

35. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on United Kingdom trade with Russia.

Mr. McLoughlin: United Kingdom exports to the countries of the former Soviet Union amounted to £295 million in the first five months of this year, a rise of 93 per cent. over the same period last year—£153 million. About 70 per cent. of these exports are to Russia.

Despite this encouraging news, the Russian market remains primarily suitable for larger companies able to bear the costs and risks involved, and for those companies already established there. Nevertheless, there can be opportunities for traders of all sizes and for medium and smaller companies where a niche exists for them or where they can act as subcontractors.

Inspectors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 5 March, Official Report, column 349, if he will list (a) the name and business connections of the inspector, (b) the date on which he published the interim and final reports in which the individual was criticised, (c) the date on which he referred the criticisms of the accountant inspector criticised in the Ramor report to any of the accountancy bodies and (d) the total cost of the Ramor and Gilgate investigations, showing the fees paid to accountant inspectors.

Mr. Neil Hamilton:

(b) The interim report dated 23 December 1981 was published on 22 March 1983. The final report dated 11 December 1987 remains unpublished.

(c) 22 March 1983 immediately on publication of the interim report.

(d) The total costs of the Ramor investigation were as follows:

Accountant	568,762
Legal	108,692
Disbursements	82,847
Total	760,301

Figures for Gilgate are not now available.

Supervisory Bodies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the sections of the Companies Acts which affect the duties of the recognised supervisory bodies to shareholders, creditors, employees and the general public.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The duties of the recognised supervisory bodies are set out in sections 35 to 40 of the Companies Act 1989.

Auditing Practices Board

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the dates of the meetings of the Auditing Practices Board which his representative has attended and the matters which were discussed at each of those meetings.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to his question on 5 March, Official Report, column 348. Since then my Department's representative has attended the meetings of the Auditing Practices Board held on the following dates:

9 March
19 April
11 May
8 June
13 July.

Minutes of the board's meeting may be obtained from the board's secretary.

Criminal Offences

Sir Richard Body: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what criminal offences he has introduced in the last five years under delegated legislation.

Mr. Sainsbury: The information requested can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Radioactive Waste

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progess has been made on conducting a job study with British Nuclear Fuels plc on the potential for alternative employment on the thermal oxide reprocessing plant site as recommended in the first report of the Environment Committee of Session 1985-86, HC 191, on radioactive waste; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Cambridge (Mrs. Campbell) on 7 July 1993, Official Report, column 149.

G7 (Balance of Trade)

Mr. Greenway: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the value of (a) imports and (b) exports of each of the G7 countries in the past year; what were the comparable figures five, 10 and 15 years ago in real terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The value of imports and exports for each of the G7 countries for 1992 are shown in table 1. Comparable figures in real terms for five, 10 and 15 years ago are not available. Comparable figures for five, 10 and 15 years ago at current prices are shown in table 2. United Kingdom export performance has been impressive in recent years.

Wind Power

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish estimates for the energy production levels of individual wind power developments in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: It is my intention to monitor the performance of windpower projects contracted under the non-fossil fuel obligation and to publish aggregated data.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will list the groups and individuals consulted by his Department to date regarding (a) the draft terms of reference of the review of nuclear power, (b) the proposed composition of the committee which will undertake the review and its technical advisers and (c) the powers of such a committee;

(2) if he will make it his policy to establish an independent committee to undertake the review into nuclear power scheduled for the current year;

(3) when he plans to make a statement outlining the terms of reference and the timetable for his departmental review of nuclear power.

Mr. Eggar: No decisions have yet been taken on the scope, timing and format of the nuclear review. A further announcement will be made in due course.

Warren Spring Laboratory

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he will publish the PA Consultants review on Warren Spring Laboratory.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) on 7 July 1993, Official Report, column 153.

Tyre Imports

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many part-worn tyres have been imported into Great Britain in the last year for which figures are available; which countries they have come from; what checks are made as to their fitness for use; how sub-standard ones are disposed of; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: In 1992 the United Kingdom imported 10,900 metric tonnes of used tyres, worth £5·4 million. The countries from which they were imported are given in the table. Policy on their fitness for use and disposal are matters for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport.

Life Insurance (Bonuses)

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, what studies he has made of the way in which life insurance companies are distributing with-profits bonuses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: There is a growing debate within the life insurance industry about the methodologies for assessing bonus distributions on with-profits policies.

As part of its regulatory responsibility to keep itself informed of developments in the life insurance industry, my Department has asked the Government Actuary's Department to conduct a survey of leading United Kingdom offices which write with-profits business, to obtain more detailed information about companies' bonus philosophies and the actuarial techniques used in assessing bonus payments.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many hours of evidence have been taken and which witnesses have appeared for his Department before Lord Justice Scott.

Mr. McLoughlin: Only one DTI witness has appeared before Lord Justice Scott. The former Secretary of State, the right hon. Member for Southend, West (Mr. Channon), gave five hours, 40 minutes of evidence on 19 May.

Shipbuilding Intervention Fund

Mr. Godman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list (a) the number, (b) the type and (c) the gross registered tonnage of vessels currently under construction in United Kingdom shipyards which have qualified for financial support under the terms of the European Community's seventh directive on the ship-building intervention fund; and what is the amount of such financial assistance in each contract.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 20 July 1993]: Twelve vessels totalling 137,400gt, which have qualified for support from the shipbuilding intervention fund, are under construction in United Kingdom yards. They are:

Three Chemical Tankers
Three Tugs
Two Ferries
One Bulk Carrier
One Dredger
One LPG Carrier
One Oil Tanker

Details of individual contracts are commercially confidential.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what safety and security measures his Department intends to take in connection with the return of high-level waste resulting from the reprocessing of spent nuclear fuel to THORP's customers.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 14 July 1993]: As is the case for other nuclear materials, the carriage of high-level waste is allowed only in special containers which are subject to stringent international safety standards. Appropriate measures are taken to ensure the security of such transport.

EMPLOYMENT

Sheltered Housing

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what considerations underlie the prohibition on local authorities which operate their own sheltered placement schemes from offering further placements where funding is available from other charitable sources.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Eric Illsley, dated 21 July 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to him about local authority Sheltered Placement Schemes (SPS). This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

I understand your question refers to local authorities operating their own sheltered placement schemes, and their role in acting as a host organisation for SPS workers.

Under the rules of SPS voluntary organisations cannot normally sponsor SPS workers into a host which is a local authority with statutory powers to provide sheltered employment. The purpose of this rule is to encourage local authorities to play an active role in developing Sheltered Placement Schemes. However, when a local authority has filled all its own allocation of places and we are unable to allocate additional places to the local authority a voluntary body with unfilled SPS places may then sponsor a place hosted by a local authority.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administrative Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the library of the House.

Industrial Deafness

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to help women who suffer from industrial deafness to claim compensation from their employers.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Employers' Liability (Compulsory Insurance) Act 1969 already requires employers to take out insurance to cover claims for compensation from employees who are injured, or who develop an industrial disease, as a result of their employer's negligence. We have no plans to extend this legislation.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the extent of change of the prevalence of the problem of industrial deafness in the past 10 years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The most reliable indicator of the change in the incidence of industrial deafness is best drawn from the numbers of workers claiming industrial injuries disablement benefit, administered by the Department of Social Security, as shown in the following table:

Year	Number of cases
1987-88	1,251
1988-89	1,170
1989-90	1,128
1990-91	1,041
1991-92	[2]972

[1] Figures from before 1986 are not comparable as they were compiled on a different basis.
[2] Provisional.

Asbestos

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the number of court actions against companies operating in the United Kingdom for infringements of the existing anti-asbestos legislation in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Health and Safety Executive is committed to ensuring that all work with asbestos is carried out safely and that other people affected by the work are not put at risk. Inspectors take whatever action is appropriate to ensure that those responsible comply with their duties under the legislation to prevent or reduce exposure to asbestos.

Details of court action taken under asbestos legislation during the past five years follows:

Years from 1 April	Informations laid	Convictions

Notes: No other prosecutions were brought under these Regulations. Figures relate to Great Britain. The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland is responsible for the Northern Ireland asbestos regulations.

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, what estimates he made of the cost to business and industry of the various provisions of the social protocol in the Maastricht treaty; what breakdown he made of the costs for each measure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No specific proposals have yet been advanced for measures to be introduced under the terms of the social protocol and the agreement of the Eleven. However, the protocol and the agreement of the Eleven extends Community competence and qualified majority voting into a number of new areas for the other 11 member states, including working conditions, information and consultation, and social exclusion. New legislation in these areas could quite clearly impose very substantial additional burdens on business and damage the competitiveness of the entire Community.

Much of the impact of action taken under the social protocol and the agreement of the Eleven would be indirect, through a loss of choice and flexibility, leading to lower competitiveness and lower output. However, some types of action would undoubtedly have direct cost implications for employers.

For the reasons set out, it is not possible to quantify the potential impact of the entire protocol and the agreement of the Eleven if it were to be applied to the United Kingdom. However, in a number of areas, for illustrative purposes, the Department has estimated the potential costs to United Kingdom employers of the type of measures which might result from terms of the social protocol and the agreement of the Eleven.

(i) Access to Training

Legislation could be proposed granting all employees the right to a minimum of 10 days training per year, paid for by their employer, regardless of whether or not this meets the needs of the employee or the business. There is some uncertainty about how many employees in the United Kingdom would currently meet the terms of such a requirement. In addition, the proportion of employees currently without 10 days' training who would take up their entitlement is difficult to predict. Using a plausible range of assumptions on current provision and take-up; the additional costs to employers—in terms of salary and lost output—could be between £2 billion and £9 billion at 1992-93 prices.

(ii) Paternity Leave

Legislation might require employers to grant all male employees paid leave on the birth of a child. Using a plausible range of assumptions on current provision and take-up, the additional cost to employers of each week of paid leave could be between £30 million and £100 million at 1992-93 prices.

(iii) Maximum Working Week

Restrictions on the working week would also be possible. As an illustration, a compulsory maximum working week—including paid overtime—of, say, 45 hours might be imposed. If this were to apply to all employees, and assuming that half the wage costs involved with the reduction in working time were borne by employers, the additional costs, compared with current arrangements, could be about £5·5 billion at 1992-93 prices.

In all three cases, the cost estimates are subject to margins of error, and, in the absence of specific proposals, should be regarded as purely illustrative. They do, however, provide some idea of the potential scale of the financial burden that could be imposed on United Kingdom employers.

Asbestos-related Diseases

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many recorded cases there were of the diseases mesothelioma, asbestosis and bilateral diffuse pleural thickening in each year since 1988 in England and Wales; and within each figure, what percentage was female.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 20 July 1993]: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available from the Department of Social Security is contained in the following table:

	Mesothelioma		Asbestosis		Bilateral diffuse pleural thickening
	Total	Per cent. Female	Total	Per cent. Female	Total	Per cent. Female
1988	406	n/a	160	n/a	109	n/a
1989	386	n/a	193	n/a	104	n/a
1990	409	3	216	3	124	nil
1991	461	4	262	2	127	nil
1992	474	3	258	3	129	2

The information is based on claims for industrial injuries disablement benefit subsequently referred to a medical boarding centre situated in England or Wales.

The percentage figure for females is not available for 1988 and 1989.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Housing Benefit

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment has been made by his Department of the cost to the housing benefit budget of the deregulation of private rents and reduction in housing association grants.

Mr. Burt: None. The impact of the deregulation of private rents and reduction in housing association grants are only two of the many factors which influence the level of housing benefit expenditure. It is therefore not possible to make a reliable estimate of the effect on housing benefit expenditure which could be attributed to these measures alone.

Government Statistical Service

Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the arrangements for the release of Government statistical service statistics by the Department of Social Security.

Mr. Lilley: I attach great importance to the integrity and validity of official statistics, and to ensuring public confidence in the statistics for which I am responsible. To this end, I have agreed standard practices specifically for the release of Government statistical service publications by my Department. The practices which will govern social security statistics from the Government statistical service are:

(1) Publications are released at the earliest possible date; the date is determined by the director of statistics.

(2) Publication dates are pre-announced in the central statistical office monthly list of social statistics to be released in the month ahead.

(3) The time of publication will be 11.30 am except for households below average income and benefit take-up statistics which will be published at 3.30 pm to coincide with an announcement to Parliament.

(4) Ministerial comment on DSS statistics is issued separately. The contents of statistical press notices and all other documents bearing the Government statistical service logo are the sole responsibility of the director of statistics.

(5) Copies of publications are available to Ministers and officials 48 hours before publication. Ministers have access to work-in-progress between two and four weeks before publication; access before then is limited to the officials responsible for advice on the statistics.

(6) Some DSS statistical series are published only in "Social Security Statistics", an annual publication. In such cases, the data are made immediately available to officials and Ministers for policy purposes—including answering parliamentary questions—and to the general public and others on request. A list of Government statistical service results statistics which have recently become available will be provided in a quarterly press notice.

Disability Benefits

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the factors which account for the variation in the numbers of home visits carried out by the disability benefits centres.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Ms Jean Corston, dated 20 July 1993:

As chief executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking what are the factors which account for the variation in the numbers of home visits carried out by the disability benefit centres.

The principal reasons for visiting customers, or their representatives, in connection with Disability Living Allowance (DLA) or Attendance Allowance (AA) claims, are when there is a need for appointee action to be undertaken and/or the standard of completion of the claim form is poor.

Visits that are required to be undertaken for DLA/AA related matters should be done by District Offices (DOs). The ability of the DOs to undertake visits that would otherwise need to be done by the Disability Benefit Centres (DBCs) is the most significant factor in determining how many visits DBCs eventually have to conduct.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants were in receipt of invalidity benefit in (a) Dundee, (b) Scotland and (c) the United Kingdom in each of the past five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Scott: The administration of invalidity benefit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. John McAllion, dated 20 July 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many claimants were in receipt of Invalidity Benefit in (a) Dundee, (b) Scotland and (c) the United Kingdom in each of the past five yers for which figures are available.

The information is not available in the exact format requested. This is because the statistics provided are for Great Britain rather than the United Kingdom (the United Kingdom includes Northern Ireland). The national statistics provided which are obtained from a 1 per cent. sample of claimants reflect the number of recipients of Invalidity Benefit at a point in time. The statistics maintained by District/Benefit Offices relate to the number of claimants to Invalidity Benefit.

The statistics for the Dundee District Office are only available from year ending March 1992. This is because the Benefits Agency was not formed until April 1991 and districts were created at the same time.

There were 11,910 people claiming Invalidity Benefit at Dundee District Office at the last working day of March 1992, and 12,995 at the last working day of March 1993. These figures were obtained from a 100 per cent. clerical count of cases in the Office, and include a small number of people who have claimed but are not receiving Invalidity Benefit, eg. because there is underlying entitlement which has been extinguished by the payment of a higher overlapping benefit or where termination action has not been completed. The Dundee District Office deals with areas other than Dundee therefore the figures shown include a small number of people who do not live in Dundee.

The table shows the number of customers in receipt of Invalidity Benefit in Scotland and Great Britain at a point in time for the last five years for which the figures are available. The statistics are based on a 1 per cent. sample of claimants.

Date[1]	Scotland	Great Britain
4 April 1987	135,000	968,000
2 April 1988	147,000	1,047,000
1 April 1989	158,000	1,126,000
31 March 1990	169,000	1,209,000
30 March 1991	181,000	1,306,000

[1] The table figures are rounded to the nearest thousand.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Lone Parents

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women have been asked to name an absent father at benefit officers in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland as a whole; how many have demurred; and how many have been recalled for further interviews.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Mrs. Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Dr. Norman A. Godman, dated 20 July 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Child Support Agency it is my responsibilty to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many women have been asked to name an absent father at benefit offices in Strathclyde and Scotland as a whole; how many have demurred, and how many have been recalled for further interviews.

All maintenance application forms (MAFs) issued to parents with care who approach the Agency ask for the name of the absent parent and the great majority of parents with care name the absent parent on the form. However, we do not hold separate information on the number of MAFs issued locally in Strathclyde, or in Scotland as a whole.

A total of 128 parents with care of children were interviewed in Strathclyde in connection with their maintenance applications during the period 5 April to 30 June 1993. A total of 252 were interviewed in Scotland as a whole. In Strathclyde, 22 parents declined without good cause to co-operate with the Agency in arranging maintenance, while in Scotland as a whole, there were 60. None of the parents concerned have been recalled for subsequent interviews.

Interviews are not a routine part of the process of arranging child maintenance and more than three-quarters of the Agency's clients choose to deal with us by post and by telephone without the need for face-to-face contact. However, where necessary, perhaps because a client is unable to complete the Maintenance Assessment Form or is reluctant to do so, arrangements will be made to discuss matters with them at their local office or at their home.

I wish to stress how carefully we consider such cases and hope that you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Child Support Agency

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) men and (b) women are employed on (i) a full-time basis, (ii) as part-time employees and (iii) on short-term employment contracts by the Child Support Agency in Scotland; and what are the projections for such numbers of employees in 1994, 1995 and 1996.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Mrs. Ross Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Dr. Norman Godman, dated 19 July 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Child Support Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many (a) men and (b) women are employed (i) on a full-time basis, (ii) as part-time employees and (iii) on short-term employment contracts by the Child Support Agency in Scotland, and what are the projections for such numbers of employees in 1994, 1995 and 1996.

The numbers of staff currently employed in the Child Support Agency in Scotland are as follows:

	Men	Women
Number employed on full-time basis	147	311
Number employed on a part-time basis	0	36
TOTAL	147	347

Of these, two men and six women are employed on short-term contracts of one year.

I cannot say what the projections will be for 1994 to 1996 in relation to numbers of employees broken down by gender but the projection for the total number of staff in Scotland for April 1994 is 700, remaining constant through 1995 and 1996.

I hope you will find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Private Pensions

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing the number of private pension plans taken out each year since 1988 with the benefit of the national insurance rebate incentive; what was the cost of the incentive rebate in each year; what were the year-end total reserves of the national insurance fund beginning at 31 March 1988; how many contributors left and joined the state earnings-related pensions scheme in each year; and what was the total number of private pension plans with a rebate outstanding at the end of each year.

Mr. Hague [holding answer 19 July 1993]: Information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is in the tables.

State Pension

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of those in receipt of the state pension have a total income of (a) £5,000 and below, (b) between £5,000 and £6,000, (c) between £6,000 and £7,000 and (d) between £7,000 and £8,000.

Mr. Hague [holding answer 19 July 1993]: The information requested is in the table.

(a) Figures may not sum to 100 per cent. due to rounding.

(b) Estimates are based on data from 1990 and 1991 Family Expenditure Surveys.

(c) Amounts are at January 1991 prices.

(d) Couples are included if either the head or the spouse is in receipt of a state pension.

TRANSPORT

Red Star Parcels Ltd.

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has held with the chairman of British Rail about safeguards to ensure that all potential purchasers of Red Star Parcels Ltd. have a fair opportunity to bid for the company and that their probity is adequately assessed.

Mr. Freeman: The British Railways Board is handling the sale of Red Star. All bids received by the closing date (13 August) will be given equal consideration by the board and its merchant bank advisers. Final terms of sale to the preferred purchaser will require the Secretary of State's approval.

Traffic Forecasts

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 1 July, Official Report, columns 590-92, giving the actual traffic and forecast traffic levels from 1968, if he will provide the forecast figure on the 1978 base for 1980.

Mr. Key: The published national road traffic forecasts, including the 1988-based forecast, did not include figures for every year of the forecast period. Intermediate year figures can be constructed by interpolation. The 1980 figures for the 1978-based forecast would have been in the range 140-144.

Seafarers

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action is currently being undertaken by his Department to achieve improved standards for the training and certification of seafarers.

Mr. Norris: The Department has undertaken a complete review of the way in which training for seafarers is delivered and the nature of the qualifications issued. A pilot project to test these new methods of assessment is about to commence using the functional approach embraced by national and Scottish vocational qualifications.

Internationally, the United Kingdom attaches great importance to the forthcoming revision of the existing Convention on the Standards of Training, Certification and Watchkeeping for Seafarers 1978. The Department will be playing a leading role in this complete review and will be putting forward the vocational qualification aproach as a means of improving the standard.

Taxis (Road Barriers)

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps his Department takes to ensure that London taxi cab drivers are provided with daily information about road barriers in the capital.

Mr. Norris: The Department and local highway authorities have long-established procedures for advising the media about road closures and restrictions; local radio stations in London have numerous daily bulletins about traffic conditions.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 12 July, Official Report, column 334, if he will break down between sea and air transport the percentage of his Department's budget spent on these modes of transport.

Mr. Norris: Air transport accounts for 1·6 per cent. and sea transport 0·5 per cent. of the Department's planned expenditure for the years 1993-94 to 1995-96.

Railway Pensions

Mr. Milligan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has concluded his discussions with the British Railways Board and the British Rail Pension Trustee Co. about safeguarding railway pensions after privatisation.

Mr. Freeman: I am placing copies of the agreement in the Library.

British Rail Maintenance Ltd.

Mr. Milligan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce his conclusions on the future of British Rail Maintenance Ltd.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The British Railways Board has now completed its review of options for the future of the British Rail Maintenance Ltd. and Level 5 Group which carries out maintenance of trains. The board has recommended to me that the British Rail Maintenance Ltd. depots at Eastleigh, Doncaster, Wolverton and Glasgow, and the Level 5 Group depots at Chart Leacon and Ilford together with the electronic repair centres at Swindon and Eastleigh should be offered for sale as soon as possible. I share the board's view that selling these businesses will be in the best interest of the railway and the work force, and consistent with the Government's proposals for reform of the railway industry.

The board is considering how best to invite offers for these businesses. The aim is to be ready to invite offers by next spring, and to complete the sale as soon as possible after that.

The British Railways Board and its advisers will develop plans for the sale but they will need the approval of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

I commend the progress made by the BRML/Level 5 Group management and work force towards improving on financial targets and on the turn-round times for vehicles to meet customer needs. But I believe that there would be a better future for these maintenance businesses in the private sector. Once in the private sector, the BRML/Level 5 Group will have greater freedom to diversify and compete for work outside the railway supply industry, to the benefit of employees.

We have also considered the future of the maintenance depots which undertake lighter maintenance of passenger trains. These depots will be treated differently. Subject to Royal Assent to the Railways Bill, we propose that the freehold of such depots should rest with Railtrack and that they should be leased to train operating companies, franchisees or independent depot operators. The Railways Bill provides for rights of access to, and regulation of, light maintenance depots.

US Air Transport Commission

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what submission the Government have made to the United States commission on the air transport industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: Yes. A submission has been transmitted to the commission in Washington. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Night Flights, Gatwick

Mr. Kenneth Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many night flights at Gatwick were made in the past year by aircraft which are at present except from the restrictions but which will in future come within the quota;

(2) how many night flights will be permitted at Gatwick in the winter of 1993-94 and summer 1994 under the new quota system announced on 6 July, excluding aircraft which are at present exempt and assuming that airlines use the same mix of aircraft as in the past year.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 19 July 1993]: More data on aircraft type, engine fit and maximum certificated landing and take-off weights are required to classify aircraft under the new night restrictions system than under the present regime. Not all these data are available for past movements, particularly for currently exempt aircraft, so only estimates can be given.

The new summer quota of 9,550 for Gatwick would translate into about 6,250 movements by all aircraft which will count against the quota including those previously exempt. As stated in answer to my right hon. Friend on 10 March at column 567, the assumption that the mix of traffic at night in the winter season will remain unchanged over the five-year period of the new restrictions is unlikely, but no substantial changes are expected in winter 1993-94. It is estimated that the winter quota of 6,820, if fully used, will translate into between 2,800 and 4,450 movements by all aircraft that will count against the quota depending on the build-up between scheduled and charter services. The quota is unlikely to be fully used in the winter 1993-94 season.

Our announcement of new restrictions on 6 July at columns 71-73 recognised the concern of those living around airports by introducing the QC½ category. This limits movements of aircraft outside the quota to those very quiet, smaller aircraft which are already exempt. Many aircraft that were exempt will now count against the quota.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received since his recent announcement on the east London river crossing; and if he will make a further statement on traffic policy in south-east London.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 20 July 1993]: To date, my right hon. Friend has written and representations from three organisations have been received. I am now considering the options available and will make a statement in due course.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Sports Council (Restructuring)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his statement of 9 July, Official Report, column 599 (1) at what date and at what time he informed the chairmen-designate of the proposed United Kingdom Sports Commission and Sports Council for England of his decision to discontinue work to put these bodies in place of the current Sports Council for Great Britain from 1 October;

(2) at what date he had consulted the chairmen-designate of the proposed United Kingdom Sports Commission and the Sports Council for England with regard to his decision to proceed no further with work to put those bodies in place of the current Sports Council of Great Britain from 1 October.

Mr. Brooke: I received in November 1992 the Sports Council's proposals for the detailed split of functions and resources between the bodies which the Government had proposed, in their December 1991 sports policy statement "Sport and Active Recreation", should succeed the present Sports Council of Great Britain.

My officials subsequently had extensive discussions with the Sports Council, including the chairmen-designate of the proposed successor bodies, on its proposals for the allocation of resources, notably to staffing. I also consulted my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on the Sports Council's proposals.

As a result of these discussions, I informed the chairmen-designate of the proposed successor bodies on 8 July that the Government no longer intended to proceed with their original plans.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the annual report of the Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency will be published.

Mr. Waldegrave: The second annual report of the Recruitment and Assessment Servcies Agency was published yesterday and copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

HEALTH

Medical Services, Inner London

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give the general medical services budgets for each inner London family health services authority for each year since 1988-89 and the amount in real terms from each budget spent on fund-holding.

Mr. Sackville: General medical services (GMS) expenditure for each year from 1988-89 to 1991-92 is shown in table A. Figures for 1992-93 will be available later this year. Expenditure on fund-holding within GMS expenditure is not separately identifiable. However, the total cost of general practitioner fund-holding expenditure for each inner London family health services authority (FHSA) is shown in table B.

1. The above totals include expenditure for practice staff, hospital purchases, drugs and appliances.
2. GP fund-holding expenditure is available only for 1991-92. Details for 1992-93 will be available later this year.

GP Fund Holders

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the benefits to patients available from GP fund-holding practices relative to non-fund-holding practices.

Mr. Sackville: Fund-holding is one of the major successes of the national health service reforms and the improvements secured by fund-holders are extending widely to benefit patients in non-fund-holding practices. We are delighted at how both general practitioner fund-holders and district health authorities are seizing the opportunities of the new NHS to secure more appropriate, high-quality care for patients.

Among the benefits are shorter waiting times, better liaison between hospitals and community services when patients are discharged and more services provided in GP surgeries.

Minimal Invasive Therapy

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to encourage the development of minimal invasive therapy.

Mr. Bowis: We shall shortly be announcing decisions on expanded training facilities for minimally invasive therapy, jointly funded by the Government and the Wolfson Foundation.

British Orthopaedic Association

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she next expects to meet the British Orthopaedic Association; and what subjects she intends to discuss.

Mr. Sackville: There are currently no plans for Ministers to meet the British Orthopaedic Association (BOA) in the near future. However, the chief medical officer will be meeting the BOA's president on 17 August to discuss hip prostheses and the quality of care.

Clothier Inquiry

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, following the publication of the White Paper on open government, if she will consider making the Clothier inquiry an open inquiry under the Tribunals and Inquiries Act 1971.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The public interest will be better served by an investigative type of inquiry rather than an adversarial one, in other words, by the type of inquiry that Sir Cecil Clothier is now leading.

NHS (Product Purchasing)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her policy on the use of inducements offered by manufacturers of drugs and hip and knee prostheses to NHS personnel to persuade them to buy their products.

Mr. Sackville: Unequivocal guidance issued to the health service in January—HSG(93)5—states that under no circumstances must purchasing decisions be influenced by inducements from suppliers or potential contractors. National health service employers and employees have a responsibility to ensure that at all times the interest of patients is paramount and that public funds are disbursed impartially and honestly.

GP Practices

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 14 July, Official Report, column 532, how many (a) non-fund-holding practices and (b) fund-holding practices she has visited in the last year.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 14 July at column 532.

General Practitioners

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the average earnings of (a) all general practitioners and (b) fund-holding general practitioners by the smallest geographical base for the most recent available period.

Mr. Sackville: Information about the geographical distribution of general practitioners' earnings or the earnings of general practitioner fund holders compared with non-fund holders is not available. The intended average net remuneration for an unrestricted principal providing general medical services in Great Britain in 1993-94 is £40,610. Payments for achieving higher levels of coverage for childhood immunisations and cervical screening and for administering the Hib meningitis vaccine are made in addition. The most recent information suggests these added an estimated £2,750 to the average general practitioner's remuneration in 1992-93.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many students gained their final qualifications to practise medicine in the United Kingdom in 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93; and how many of them entered general practice in the United Kingdom from each of those years.

Mr. Sackville: The available information is shown in the tables.

	Year ending:
	31 July 1991	31 July 1992	31 July 1993
Students obtaining their first registerable qualification from medical schools in the United Kingdom	3,573	3,644	n/a

	Year ending:
	30 June 1991	30 June 1992	30 June 1993
Doctors joining general practice in the United Kingdom	1,609	1,510	n/a

The doctors covered by the two tables will not be the same, as a period of training follows first registerable qualification before admission to general practice. The second table will include doctors who qualified outside the United Kingdom.

Fluoride Prescriptions

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost to the NHS of fluoride prescriptions for each quarter of 1992 and the first three months of 1993.

Mr. Sackville: The information for England is shown in the table.

Period	Net ingredient cost (£'000s)
1st Quarter 1992	10·2
2nd Quarter 1992	10·3
3rd Quarter 1992	8·7
4th Quarter 1992	8·9
1st Quarter 1993	66·9

Note: The net ingredient cost is the basic cost of the drug before any discount and not including dispensing costs or fees. The data cover prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists and appliance contractors, dispensing doctors, and prescriptions submitted by prescribing doctors and dentists. Dental practitioners providing general dental services in the national health service have, from 1 January 1993, been able to prescribe fluoride supplements under the national health service.

Needy Children

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to secure that the children of homeless families are classified as children in need and gain access to services provided under the Children Act.

Mr. Bowis: We have no plans to do so. The definition of "in need" in the Children Act 1989 is in terms of a child's health and development, including disablement. It is for local authorities to seek out the extent of children in need in their areas and to publish services available to help them and their families.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what monitoring has been undertaken by her Department into the definition of in need according to part III of the Children Act 1989 used in practice by local authorities; and what plans she has to introduce new guidelines.

Mr. Bowis: The first report to Parliament of the working of the Children Act 1989—Cm 2144—was published in January 1993. We are keeping the position under review, but have no reason to believe that the guidance on this subject in "The Children Act 1989: Guidance and Regulations Volume 2 Family Support, Day Care and Educational Provision for Young Children", a copy of which is available in the Library, is in need of amendment.

Children's Residential Care

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will announce the final terms of reference and the membership of the support force for children's residential care.

Mr. Bowis: Further to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Esher (Mr. Taylor) on 24 June at columns 249-50, the terms of reference are as follows:

1. (a) to offer advice to individual authorities on the interrelated issues of quality of care and management in children's residential care, with particular reference to the appointment and selection, personnel management, support, development and internal training of children's residential care staff.

(b) to offer advice to individual authorities and, where appropriate, groups of authorities on suitable mechanisms for matching needs and supply in their localities or regions, taking account of the potential contributions of voluntary, private and public sectors; and on related commissioning and contractual issues. A particular focus of the work will be to assist authorities and the voluntary and private sectors to improve occupancy rates and hence reduce unit costs in children's residential homes where this is appropriate.

(c) to prepare material for a code of employment practice, for discussion with employer and other interests.

2. The support force for children's residential care will work under Department of Health auspices, and from time to time as requested, report on its programme and progress. It will work with social services and, as appropriate, other agencies by invitation in a consulting and facilitating role; by implication it will draw attention to and disseminate examples of good practice. The social services inspectorate's advice will be available to it. It will work within the framework of the Children Act 1989 and regulations and guidance issued following that and other relevant legislation; the Warner report and Government decisions on it; and other material that may be relevant. Its remit is for a period of two years from the summer of 1993. Ministers will then review the progress made.

The members of the support force are:

Adrianne Jones CBE
Leader of the support force. Formerly director of social services for Birmingham and Hillingdon. Member of the Warner committee on the recruitment, selection and development of staff in children's homes.

Louise Bessant
Co-ordinator, Young People's Forum, Birmingham social services.

James King OBE
Former director of the Caldecott Community.

Sellafield

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will consult the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment in the event of any application being made to vary the discharge licence from British Nuclear Fuel's Sellafield installation;

(2) what advice she has received from the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment concerning the health risk resulting from the proposed liquid and gaseous radioactive discharges from British Nuclear Fuel's Sellafield installation; and if she will publish the advice.

Mr. Sackville: Applications to dispose of radiactive waste from a licensed site are considered by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food—"the inspectorates". It is for them to decide who they should consult in any particular case, subject to any relevant statutory requirements.

The Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment (COMARE) commented to the inspectorates on British Nuclear Fuel's application for revised discharge authorisations at the Sellafield site. We have arranged for copies of COMARE's response to be placed in the Library. The inspectorates carefully considered all the responses made in the consultation including that from COMARE, before coming to the conclusion announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on 28 June at column 392.

Private Ambulances

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration she has given to the regulation of private ambulance operators.

Mr. Sackville: The code of practice recently agreed by the Department of Health's ambulance policy advisory group sets out minimum standards for non-national health service patient transport providers. It is for prospective purchasers of private ambulance services to satisfy themselves that operators are competent to provide the required service.

Patients (Major Surgery)

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to ensure that patients entering (a) NHS and (b) private hospitals have all necessary facilities to safeguard them following major surgical procedures; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: A private hospital is required by law to register with the district health authority, which must satisfy itself that the statutory requirements, and any local conditions of registration, are being met at all times, including adequate medical, surgical and nursing equipment and adequate treatment facilties. It is for national health service providers to assess the level of service need to support surgical procedures, and to provide the staff and facilities to meet those needs. It is for NHS purchasers to satisfy themselves about the quality of the service provided to patients. We have no plans to alter the present arrangements.

NHS Dental Treatment

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the average cost of a course of NHS dental treatment per patient liable to full charge in each year since 1979.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

General Dental Services (GDS)—England

Year	Patients liable to full charge Average Cost (£)	Patients wholly exempt or remitted Average Cost (£)
1979	13·32	15·48
1980	16·26	19·20
1981	18·13	26·14
1982	19·38	27·71
1983	20·10	34·42
1984	21·49	37·07
1985	21·70	39·19
1986-87	23·46	42·64
1987-88	25·84	45·13
1988-89	28·46	49·23
1989-90	30·24	47·48
1990-91	n/a	n/a
1991-92	31·83	51·69
1992-93	n/a	n/a

Notes:

1. Data from 1979 to 1985 are shown in calendar years. Thereafter they are shown in financial years.
2. Data for 1990-91 are not available as the introduction of the new dental contract interrupted the data series.
3. Data for 1992-93 are not yet available.
4. The small number of courses of treatment where charges were partly remitted has not been included in the calculations.
5. Before 1 January 1989 dental examinations did not attract a patient charge. Therefore, a course of dental treatment which included only a dental examination did not attact a patient charge. Such courses of dental treatment have been allocated in this table to the appropriate category whether the patient was liable to charges or not.

Medical Care (Proposed Authority)

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans she has to set up a medical/surgical equivalent to the Committee on Safety of Medicines;

(2) what plans she has for the creation of an Office of Medicine as a statutory body to oversee standards of medical care;

(3) what plans she has to introduce legislation to ensure that the NHS and the private medical sector are equally accountable and bound by the same regulations under one single regulatory authority.

Mr. Sackville: We have no such plans.

Surgeons

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to ensure that surgeons do not undertake procedures for which they have not received specific training or accreditation.

Mr. Sackville: The accreditation of training posts and systems of postgraduate education, examination and training are matters for the responsible professional bodies. A doctor has a professional responsibility not to undertake a procedure which he or she is not competent to perform.

EMPLOYMENT

Occupational Hazards

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the 10 most frequent occupational related causes of death for the latest available period.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The most frequent causes of recorded occupationally related mortality in 1991 and/or 1992 were: mesothelioma; accidental trauma; pneumoconiosis; asbestosis; accidental poisoning and gassing; lung cancer due to asbestos; byssinosis; other cancers; and allergic alveolitis, including farmer's lung. There were only occasional deaths recorded from other causes.

Social Charter

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in what manner Her Majesty's Government have published or publicised the text of the social charter of the European Economic Community as agreed by 11 of its member states at Strasbourg on 9 December 1989.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government have never published or publicised the text of the social charter agreed by the other 11 member states.

Employment Rehabilitation Centre, Ingol

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the capital cost of the purpose-built employment rehabilitation centre at Ingol, Preston, at the time it was built, expressed in 1993 values; and what price has been agreed for its sale.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 20 July 1993]: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mrs. Audrey Wise, dated 22 July 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to him about the capital cost of Preston (Ingol) Employment Rehabilitation Centre (ERC) when it was built and the price agreed for its sale. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The building of Preston ERC was completed in 1978 and the centre was opened in 1979. The work involved in retrieving the exact total capital costs of the ERC and converting these to 1993 prices would incur disproportionate costs. I am therefore unable to supply this information.

The ERC was closed on 31 December 1992 and tenders were invited for its sale. A price has been agreed and the site has been sold subject to contract. You will appreciate that, until the sale is completed and contracts are exchanged, the price agreed is still classified as "Commercial in Confidence" and cannot be revealed.

I am sorry to have to send you a disappointing reply. However, I am satisfied that all the correct tendering procedures have been followed to ensure we obtain the best possible price for the site.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Insurance

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what conclusions he has reached on the report by the Director General of Fair Trading on the marketing and sale of investment-linked insurance products.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Director General of Fair Trading (DGFT) reported to my predecessor in March about the rules on marketing and sale of investment-linked life insurance products[1], made last July by the Securities and Investments Board (SIB) and the Life Assurance and Unit Trust Regulatory Organisation (LAUTRO). These rules had been drawn up in response to the then Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in December 1990, who asked for changes in the rules to meet the concerns raised in the report of April 1990 by the previous DGFT.

[1] The marketing and sale of investment-linked insurance products. The rules of the Securities and Investments Board and the Life Assurance and Unit Trust Regulatory Organisation. A report by the Director General of Fair Trading to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, March 1993.

In his report under the Financial Services Act 1986 (FSA), the DGFT was of the opinion that four aspects of the new rules were likely to have significantly anti-competitive effects. Under the FSA, the Treasury must consider whether the rules are likely to have significant anti-competitive effects and, if it considers that they do, whether those effects are greater than necessary for investor protection.

In April, the Treasury invited comments on the DGFT's report as well as on his separate report under the Fair Trading Act 1973[2]. Many hon. Members have written to me about the reports, and a large number of written submissions have been received from interested parties, many of which have been discussed in detail with officials. I have taken account of the views and arguments put during this consultation process in reaching my conclusions.

I endorse the director general's finding that four aspects of the rules have or are likely to have significantly anti-competitive effects. I do not find that these effects are necessary to protect investors. The Treasury is therefore directing SIB to develop a new approach to the regulation of the marketing of life insurance products through rules to rectify the deficiencies identified. My reasons, and the changes the Treasury now requires, are set out below.

[2] "Fair Trading and Life Insurance Savings Products: A Report by the Director General of Fair Trading", March 1993.

There has been a good deal of justified criticism concerning the proportion of long-term policies surrendered early and the low surrender values of policies surrendered in the early years. The relevant SIB rules are designed to improve regulation and to help the investor by requiring life offices both to disclose surrender values for the first five years of life policies and to indicate the point at which the surrender value may equal or exceed the amount paid by the investor if the crossover point falls outside the first five years. The rules prevent life offices disclosing surrender values for a longer period.

The DGFT has welcomed the rule changes in so far as they give the investor more information about the long-term and illiquid nature of these investments and about likely surrender values in the early years. However, the DGFT concludes that the absence of information about surrender values in the later years of the policy limits the ability of investors to make properly informed choices among the products of different life offices and between life products and other investments; and hence is likely to restrict and distort competition to a significant extent.

SIB and LAUTRO have concentrated on better disclosure of surrender values in the early years where the major concerns have arisen. Surrender values, however, do vary considerably between life offices in the later years and I agree with the DGFT that lack of information is likely significantly to restrict and distort competition. I have also taken into account other factors relevant to investor protection; in particular, the risk that disclosure of likely cash surrender values for each year of a policy could appear to offer guaranteed returns and could be in serious danger of overloading the investor with a huge array of figures. Any profile of figures which appeared to offer guaranteed returns would have investor disadvantages in so far as it altered life offices' investment behaviour and thus ultimately reduced the returns delivered or raised the cost of a given return; equally, a detailed array of figures, added to all the other quantitative information, could overload investors with complex and confusing details and thereby defeat the object of disclosure. I have examined these arguments and options and concluded that, through fuller disclosure of the implications of early surrender on the value of policies, it should be possible to remove the anti-competitive effect of non-disclosure of surrender values in later years in a way which avoids the danger of appearing to give guarantees and which does not overload the investor.

The Treasury is therefore directing SIB to develop a new approach and to bring forward rules which will provide a clear and quantified account of the effect of life offices' intended surrender value practices on the value of the policy if cashed in early beyond the initial five years, without implying guaranteed projections or overloading the investor with figures. The new requirements should provide, in plain terms, a clear description of the effect on surrender values throughout the duration of the policy.

While own charges—the charges currently levied by the particular life office—are required to be used in the calculations of likely surrender values during the first five years of a policy, SIB's and LAUTRO's rules require that illustrations of projected future returns on policies use standard—approximately average—assumptions about the charges levied by life offices. Illustrations are not mandated by the regulators but are a strong marketing tool. Requiring the use of standard charges prevents life offices from producing illustrations which demonstrate the relative merits of their products, thus restricting their ability to compete with others in the market. Use of own charges should also bring downward pressure on costs. I therefore agree with the DGFT that the requirement to use standard charges in illustrations is likely significantly to restrict and distort competition among life offices. Investor protection considerations also argue in favour of use of own charges. Use of standard charges can be misleading to investors by implying that charges do not affect performance when, in reality, charges of life offices to not alter rapidly and do influence total returns. In their joint submission to the Treasury commenting on the DGFT's report SIB, LAUTRO and the Financial Intermediaries, Managers and Brokers Regulatory Organisation accept that own charges ought now to be used in illustrations.

The Treasury is therefore directing SIB to bring forward rules which will require policy illustrations to use the life offices' own recent charges. This information should make clear to investors the full impact of product costs throughout the duration of the policy.

Within the independent financial adviser sector, individual firms are allowed to and do rebate commission to investors. The final price to the investor can therefore take account of the costs of distribution, with the more efficient advisers being able to offer keener prices. Cost competitiveness is allowed to reign. In marked contrast, SIB/LAUTRO rules have the effect of preventing price competition for a life office's products between its tied channels and outlets. There is no direct rule preventing the rebating of commission by tied agents to their customers. But the best advice rule has been found in practice to prevent differential pricing because it would prevent a tied agent advising the purchase of a particular product if the product were available more cheaply through another tied outlet.

The DGFT has concluded that rules which prevent some intermediaries from passing through to investors the benefits of cost differentials and efficiencies and which in practice require cross subsidisation between tied outlets are significantly anti-competitive. There has been no real attempt in the representations I have received to argue that the practice is anything other than anti-competitive and I agree with the DGFT's finding. The weight of the representations on this issue has been that the anti-competitive effects of the best advice rule are outweighed by investor protection benefits which also result from the best advice rule; in particular that an investor should be able to expect that if (s)he is buying a life office product through a tied channel, the same product could not be secured more cheaply through another tied outlet.

I have considered all the countervailing investor protection arguments very carefully, but I do not find them sufficiently convincing to outweigh the competitive disadvantages or even in their own right. I can see no good reason why price competition between tied agents and outlets should not be compatible with the preservation of best advice as well as suitability, just as it is with IFAs. Introducing competition within the tied channels will, on the contrary, result in benefits to the investor.

The Treasury is therefore directing SIB to adapt the best advice regime to allow differential pricing in the tied sector. As with IFAs, best advice would continue to pertain for the product and value for money/price within the range of products and prices offered by the particular tied outlet.

SIB and LAUTRO rules require commission, in cash terms, to be disclosed by independent financial advisers if requested by the investor—so-called "soft" disclosure. No such requirement applies to other intermediaries such as tied agents and company representatives. Whether or not the amount of commission is requested by investors, it is disclosed automatically by the life office no later than the start of the cooling-off period, but is expressed as a percentage of premiums to be paid.

The DGFT has concluded that these rules are likely to distort competition among IFAs and between them and other intermediaries to a significant extent. His reasoning rests mainly on the argument that the IFA sector is a market, separate from the tied agent and direct sales force sectors, in which commission is the price for the advice which the investor receives. He therefore calls for the early automatic disclosure of commission, in actual cash amounts, to the investor, only by IFAs.

I have considered carefully the enormous number of representations about the structure of the life insurance-linked investment market. Polarisation has introduced dichotomies into the marketplace and there are significant differences between the roles of IFAs on the one hand and the tied agents and company representatives on the other. But they are not two completely distinct and separate markets. Their roles and functions overlap and they are in competition with each other for much of the same business. Tied agents and life offices' direct sales forces are also in the business of giving advice, although their advice is restricted to the investment decision and to the choice of product within the range of a given life office. Similarly, commission cannot be regarded simply as the price of advice. I have concluded that to require early automatic disclosure of commission only by IFAs would distort the market further and would be likely to result in a significant reduction in competition by encouraging IFAs to become tied. IFAs offer a valuable range of choice and advice to investors as well as providing an essential element of competition within the industry: it is important that the IFA distribution channel is not disadvantaged in relation to the other distribution channels by the commission disclosure regime.

The current rule on commission disclosure nevertheless remains a very serious concern in an industry where sales practices are often dominated and perceived to be dominated by the payment of commission. Up-front commissions are of significant size and vary substantially both for similar products between life offices and between different products supplied by the same life office. Especially where the investor is not fully aware of the level of commission received, there is a serious risk of advice being biased by the level of commission received. This risk of bias exists in both the tied and independent sectors. Where commission is not paid, the structure of remuneration and incentives can also create a risk of bias. The current rule discriminates unfairly between IFAs on the one hand and tied agents and company representatives on the other, to the former's disadvantage. By requiring "soft" disclosure only, the current rule also allows products to compete in practice other than on the basis of their price, quality and suitability. I have assessed the evidence and have concluded that the current rule is likely to have the effect of significantly distorting and restricting competition between life offices, distribution channels and products.

In order not to distort the marketplace, it will be necessary to require automatic disclosure of commission in cash terms at an early stage by all distribution channels or broadly equivalent information in the cases of direct sales forces and bancassurance where commission is not paid. This, of course, should also enhance investor protection in that it will enable investors more easily to judge the extent to which the advice they receive could be biased. I have, however, had to consider carefully whether the likely quality and comparability of the information will be such as to be informative to the investor. I believe that it should be. But the construction of measures for all distribution channels which are meaningful, not open to manipulation and cost effective, requires detailed and expert consideration and a combination of definition and oversight by the regulatory bodies.

Accordingly, the Treasury is directing SIB to develop proposals for fuller disclosure of commission, as specified above, and the nearest equivalent for distribution channels where commission is not paid or forms only a small element of remuneration. In developing these proposals, I know that SIB will wish to work closely with the industry and other regulatory bodies and I look particularly to the industry to respond constructively to this remit. I am also asking SIB to see that the new regime on disclosure of commission and equivalents is firmly enforced.

The regulation of the sale and marketing of life insurance policies has been the subject of lengthy—too lengthy—debate. The arguments on each of the points raised by the DGFT are complex, but it is now time to draw the debate to a rapid close so that both firms and regulators can settle down in a stable regime to plan with confidence. This must be in the best long-term interest of investors and the industry alike. Disclosure of more information to their clients, with proper explanation, should hold no fears for advisers, be they IFAs, tied agents or direct sales forces. Indeed, greater transparency should help increase consumer confidence in the life insurance industry and promote healthy competition in the market for long-term savings products.

The Treasury is therefore directing SIB to bring forward by the end of 1993 detailed new draft rules as described above, or in the case of commission disclosure detailed proposals for how commission and equivalents should be measured. To ensure that they are effective and durable, it is important that the new arrangements are consumer tested before they are introduced. I am also asking SIB to consider adjustments to supervision to secure compliance with the spirit as well as the letter of the new regime and to make an assessment of the potential cost of compliance to ensure that the burdens on business are no more than necessary to deliver fair competition and investor protection.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will publish his proposals to amend the tax system to allow for reserving in insurance business; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: In his Budget speech my right hon. Friend the Member for Kingston upon Thames (Mr. Lamont) referred to representations made by the insurance industry and acknowledged that there may be a case for allowing tax relief on certain types of equalisation reserves covering occasional, exceptional losses. Such reserves would have to be within the regulatory framework for the industry. The Inland Revenue and the Department of Trade and Industry will next week be jointly issuing the consultation document which we promised. This looks at the issues in greater detail and invites comments on a number of matters by 29 October 1993.

As my right hon. Friend said in his Budget speech, tax-deductible equalisation reserves would be a major departure for the British tax system. If there is a consensus that equalisation reserves for particular types of insurance business should become a regulatory requirement, and practical methods of isolating the business in question and of calculating the reserve can be found, we would need to consider carefully whether the introduction of a regulatory requirement, accompanied by tax relief, should be financed by compensating changes elsewhere. Given the overall fiscal position, I am clear that it would not be appropriate for the Exchequer to suffer a net cost from the introduction of such a scheme.

Central Statistical Office

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how the Central Statistical Office performed against its key targets for 1992-93; and what changes have been made for 1993-94.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Central Statistical Office's performance against its key targets for 1992-93 is described in the agency's annual report and accounts, which are being laid before the House and published today. The CSO met all 20 of its performance targets relating to the quality of economic statistics and overall met 30 out of 33 targets set for the year. There were significant reductions in the scale of revisions to key economic statistics and in balancing items in the sectoral accounts.

These improvements continue the significant progress seen in the quality of economic statistics since the formation of the CSO as a separate department in 1989 and its establishment as an executive agency in 1991. The staff of the CSO are to be congratulated on seeing through these substantial developments.

The CSO's key targets for 1993-94 are set out in the "CSO Programme Strategies 1993-96", a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House. As before, these targets cover the timeliness of published statistics, the size of revisions, the coherence of key economic statistics, the response rates for statistical inquiries, action to minimise the load on respondents, reponse times to public requests for information and the CSO's running costs, efficiency improvements and receipts. A number of the targets have been tightened for 1993-94 in recognition of the improvement in CSO performance.

Incomes

Ms Corston: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the research projects and reviews, including regression analyses, undertaken by the Central Statistical Office and other Government bodies to show the factors related to the trends in disposable income in the 1980s and 1990s at the top and the bottom of the distribution of income among the population of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nelson: The Central Statistical Office is currently reviewing all aspects of the annual article on "The effects of taxes and benefits on household income". The 1991 article, published in the May edition of "Economic Trends", announced the review and invited readers to comment on the current analysis.

The Central Statistical Office is not sponsoring any research projects by outside bodies in this area at present.

Relocation Costs

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the amount of (a) average, (b) lowest and (c) highest total costs of relocation incurred by an employee and reimbursed or paid directly by an employer in respect of civil servants in (i) Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, (ii) Her Majesty's Inland Revenue and (iii) Her Majesty's Treasury in the last two years.

Mr. Dorrell: During the past two years, the total amounts of payments made to, or on behalf of, employees relocated by the departments specified—excluding additional housing cost allowances which are only paid to those employees moving to higher cost areas—are given in the table:

	Average £000	Lowest £000	Highest £000
Customs and Excise	32	3	[1]245
Inland Revenue	[2]27	1	[1]98
Treasury	17	9	26

Notes:[1] The highest total payments made are due to a combination of factors including the slump in the United Kingdom housing market, particularly in London and the south-east, and the fact that the employees concerned experienced long delay in disposing of their properties at their former locations. The bulk of the payments represent reimbursed bridging loan interest and special payments to relieve financial hardship of employees in respect of a fall in the value of their properties whilst they were on the market.

Occupational Pensions

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the proportion of (a) all pensioners, (b) single male pensioners, (c) single female pensioners, (d) pensioner couples, (e) single women aged 75 years or over and (f) single men aged 75 years or over, who are in receipt of an occupational pension on the basis of the most recent family expenditure survey data available; and for each group, what is the mean and median amount received.

Mr. Nelson: The figures in the table are from the 1991 family expenditure survey. Figures are subject to sampling variation. The amounts have been rounded to the nearest 10p.

	Proportion receiving an occupational pension	Mean amount occupational pension per week	Median amount occupational pension per week
	Per cent.	£	£
All pensioners	43·1	46·90	30·50
Single male pensioners	59·6	45·80	28·20
Single female pensioners	43·1	35·50	24·10
Pensioner couples	68·8	67·50	40·10
Single women aged 75 years and over	36·3	35·80	23·30
Single men aged 75 years or over	55·6	40·70	26·00

Government Debt

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the distribution of Government debt between the banking and non-banking sectors in each month since the Budget.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 21 July 1993]: Estimates of gilt sales by sector are published in the Bank of England's monthly monetary statistics press release—public sector funding table. Estimates of the sectoral distribution of the level of outstanding national debt are made quarterly and published in the November issue of the "Bank of England Quarterly Bulletin"—tables H and J in the 1992 edition.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the Government's policy on the proportion of Government debt to be sold to the banking sector.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 21 July 1993]: The Government's policy is to fully fund their borrowing needs. There is no policy as to the proportion of debt to be sold to any particular sector.

Surplus Land Sales

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what guidance he has issued on maximising the financial return from the sale of surplus land.

Mr. Dorrell: Revised guidance on the disposal of land and buildings was issued to Government Departments and non-departmental public bodies on 23 July 1992. The guidance was circulated at the same time to members of the Public Accounts Committee, together with a note setting out the key points.

VAT

Mr. Gale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to change the liability of VAT of amateur sports and cultural activities in the public sector.

Sir John Cope: I am discussing with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for National Heritage a VAT exemption for the supply of certain services by non-profit-making organisations and local authorities to persons who take part in sport or physical education. This would be a limited exemption to be introduced by Treasury order. The precise scope of the exemption would be determined after we have discussed with the representative sports bodies the services and sports to be included.

We shall also be holding discussions with a view to examining the case for exempting certain cultural services and associated goods supplied by public authorities.

Sterling Deposits

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the gross figures for sterling deposits held in Switzerland by institutions other than the central bank.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 15 July 1993]: Neither the Bank of England nor the Treasury collects this information.

Barlow Clowes

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he has taken to date against the third parties implicated in the Barlow Clowes collapse.

Mr. Nelson: I have been asked to reply.

Responsibility for Barlow Clowes matters rests with the Treasury under the Transfer of Functions (Financial Services) Order 1992.

The Government continue vigorously to pursue any claims capable of reducing the cost to the taxpayer of the ex gratia payments scheme. Because of a number of outstanding actions, I cannot give details of recoveries made, as doing so might influence their outcome. However, as I said on 16 June, Official Report, columns 613-14, the Government have secured an order for damages against Mr. and Mrs. Clowes in the sum of £31 million.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Abu Dhabi (British Detainees)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the British detainees in Abu Dhabi.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: On 13 July 1993 all the Bank of Credit and Commerce International detainees in Abu Dhabi were either charged or conditionally released. Five British nationals in detention were charged. One British national, who had been detained, has been released but cannot leave the United Arab Emirates until investigations are completed. A British national who was previously released but unable to leave the UAE has been charged. The trial date has been set for 9 October 1993.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimates he has of the size of (a) regular forces of the Yugoslav army and (b) regular forces of the Croatian army currently present and operating in Bosnia-Herzegovina; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There is continuing evidence that Serbian and Croatian Government forces are operating in Bosnia-Herzegovina, but due to constant troop movements and the difficulties faced by international monitors, it is not possible to provide reliable estimates of their numbers.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to President Izetbegovic about the maltreatment of mentally handicapped adults and children at Fojnica hospital in Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We share the United Nations High Commission for Refugees' concern about the desperate plight of the patients in the hospital in Fojnica. This is a further example of how innocent civilians have suffered as a result of the conflict in Bosnia. We have repeatedly urged all parties to respect the rights and interests of civilians.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress the United Nations Security Council has reported on investigations carried out by the United Nations Sanctions Committee into Croatian breaches of United Nations Security Council resolution 713 following investigations into this matter in September 1992; when Her Majesty's Government received a full report of the alleged violations contained in the case referred by the United Nations Sanctions Committee to the United Nations Security Council in September 1992; if he will publish this report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Following the discovery of arms consignments in Croatia by United Nations forces in September 1992, the United Nations Sanctions Committee asked the Croatian and Iranian Governments for an explanation. The Croatians denied prior knowledge of the consignment. The Iranian authorities have not satisfactorily explained why the arms concerned were being transported in an Iranian aircraft.

The equipment has since been destroyed by the United Nations Protection Force on the instructions of the United Nations.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on the issue of sanctions against Croatia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Foreign Ministers of the European Community agreed in Brussels on 19 July to consider withdrawing Croatia's preferential trading benefits with the European Community, in view of Croatia's continued involvement in the conflict in Bosnia.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received from British forces in Bosnia-Herzegovina of atrocities having been carried out by Muslim forces within the territory of Bosnia-Herzegovina; and what representations have been made to the Bosnian presidency.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: British forces deployed in Bosnia under the auspices of UNPROFOR provide us with regular reports about events on the ground there. It is clear that all parties have been responsible for committing atrocities, but the record of the Bosnia Serbs is worst. We have repeatedly urged all parties to respect the rights and interests of civilians.

Entry Clearance Posts

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what posts have been designated for the purpose of receiving applications for entry clearance in (a) the states comprising the Indian sub-continent, (b) the states comprising the territories of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and (c) Morocco, Tunisia, Algeria, Egypt, Sudan, Ethiopia, Djibouti, Somalia and Kenya; and what are the categories of applications applicable in each location.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I am arranging to send the hon. Member a full list showing which diplomatic and consular posts accept which kinds of application for entry clearance.

Debt

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current total of outstanding official debt owed to the United Kingdom by countries in Sub-Saharan Africa; and how much of that debt is owned to (a) the Export Credits Guarantee Department, (b) the Overseas Development Administration and (c) the Commonwealth Development Corporation.

Mr. Portillo: I have been asked to reply.

Total outstanding official debt owed to ECGD and ODA by countries in Sub-Saharan Africa is currently £3·6 billion and £98 million respectively. Debt owed to the Commonwealth Development Corporation is not treated as official debt.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Judges' Notes (Murder Trials)

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make it his policy to make available to an hon. Member the judge's notes for a murder trial in which one of his constituents wishes him to inquire into his conviction.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Judge's notes are a closed record and not normally made available. The verbatim record of a murder trial is kept for five years, and I refer the hon. Member to my reply to his question which appeared in Hansard of 8 July 1993, column 205.

"A New Framework for Local Justice"

Mr. Deva: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received from magistrates courts committees and their clerks on the White Paper "A New Framework for Local Justice" would lead to a better administration of summary justice.

Mr. John M. Taylor: A list of all those who responded to each consultative document is contained in the relevant decision paper. An analysis of the responses received was published with each decision paper. There has also been regular correspondence and meetings with magistrates courts committee staff, magistrates and their representative organisations.

Mr. Deva: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what account was taken in formulating the proposals in the White Paper, "A New Framework for Local Justice" of the policy of local management empowerment.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The White Paper "A New Framework for Local Justice" took account of a 1989 scrutiny which recommended that the magistrates courts service should be organised as an executive agency, but concluded that the service should continue to be managed locally. The White Paper addresses weaknesses in the service identified by the scrutiny, while leaving the management of the service in the hands of local committee of magistrates and enhancing the ability of the committees to manage strategically and exercise proper scrutiny of the organisation for which they are responsible.

Mr. Deva: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what estimate he has made of the potential savings resulting from the implementation of the proposals contained in the White Paper "A New Framework for Local Justice".

Mr. John M. Taylor: The White Paper announced wide-ranging changes to the organisational structure of the magistrates courts service. The purpose of these changes is to provide clearer lines of accountability, to secure maximum co-operation in the management of the service with other parts of the justice system, to guarantee the judicial independence of magistrates and their legal advisers and to yield improvements in the efficiency and effectiveness of the service. Better value for money resulting from the new arrangements should when realised more than offset the transitional costs. The particular savings at local level will depend largely on the management decisions taken by magistrates' courts committees about the way they will implement the changes.

Mr. Deva: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made as to the extent to which the changes envisaged in the White Paper "A New Framework for Local Justice" will lead to the better administration of summary justice in outer London.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The changes announced in the White Paper "A New Framework for Local Justice" will lead to a better administration of summary justice throughout England and Wales including outer London by providing clearer lines of accountability both locally and to the Lord Chancellor, by guaranteeing the judicial independence of magistrates and their legal advisers, by yielding improvements in efficiency and effectiveness and by securing maximum co-operation in the management of the service with other parts of the criminal justice system. The newly formed magistrates courts inspectorate will have a particular responsibility for helping to raise the performance standards of management and administration.

Mr. Deva: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the effects of the White Paper "A New Framework for Local Justice" on the independence of justices' clerks.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I am entirely committed to the principle of judicial independence. This is why the legislation which, with Parliament's approval, will put the new statutory framework in place, will enshrine in statute a guarantee of judicial independence. Justices' clerks are not judicial officers, but their advice to magistrates in individual cases will not be subject to management direction. In respect of management responsibilities—a very substantial part of the justices' clerks' responsibility—it is important to have a proper framework of line management and accountability. The White Paper reforms will provide this.

Mr. Deva: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the extent to which the proposed population criterion for magistrates courts committee areas contained in the White Paper "A New Framework for Local Justice".

Mr. John M. Taylor: We have concluded that the number of magistrates courts committees should be reduced in order to yield improvement in efficiency and effectiveness and to secure maximum co-operation with other parts of the criminal justice system. Population is one of a number of criteria developed in consultation with the service against which we will decide how this reduction should be effected.

Mr. Deva: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which magistrates courts committees have (a) a weighted case load of over 90,000, (b) an annual outturn, at 1991-92 prices of over £2·5 million and (c) a population of over 750,000; and if he will make a statement on the extent to which these reach performance targets.

Mr. John M. Taylor: This information is set out in the Magistrates Courts Consultative Council document No. 2 "Magistrates' Courts Committee Areas (excluding Greater London)", a copy of which I have arranged to be placed in the Library of the House. The reorganisation proposals for courts committees are intended to lead to improvements in local performance and accountability and these will be measured by performance standards which we are now developing.

Appeals

Mr. Cox: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the number of cases heard by appeal courts in England and Wales where the original sentence has either been reduced or quashed in the last three years.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The table shows the total number of appellants dealt with during the last three years in the Court of Appeal, criminal division and the Crown court—on appeal from a magistrates' court—whose appeals against sentence have been allowed or allowed in part.

Successful appeals against sentence to the Court of Appeal and the Crown Court during the years 1990 to 1992

	Court of Appeal	Crown Court
1990	1,526	3,157
1991	1,219	2,941
1992	1,049	2,883

Judges (Dismissal)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what has been the number of judges dismissed in each of the last three years for incapacity.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No judges have been removed from office on the ground of incapacity in the last three years.

Judges (Criticism)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what has been the number of appeal court cases where the action of the trial judge has been criticised by the appeal court in each of the last three years.

Mr. John M. Taylor: This information is not collected.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what procedures are followed when a judge is criticised by the appeal courts for the way in which he has handled cases appearing before them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr John M. Taylor: In all cases heard at the Court of Appeal criminal division, copies of judgments of the Court of Appeal are sent to the Crown court centre at which the trial took place. A separate copy is sent direct to the trial judge.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Drinking Water

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what programme is in hand to enable drinking water of potable quality to flow to all water taps in the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Ray Powell: Drinking water supplied direct from the mains is already available from all taps in the parliamentary estate which are so marked. Water supplied to other cold taps—for example, to wash hand basins—may or may not be of potable quality, since some of this water comes from storage cisterns. There are no plans to supply mains water to every cold tap.

Vote Office

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, which of the domestic Select Committees will have responsibility for the services provided by the Vote Office following the transfer of that office from the Library Department to the Clerk's Department with effect from 1 November.

Mr. Beith: The provision of documents and publications to Members by the Vote Office is a matter within the area of responsibility of the Administration Committee, but the Vote Office may need to be associated with the work of other committees as appropriate—for example with the Information Committee in respect of policy relating to information technology.

SCOTLAND

Salmon

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he has given to the report of the Salmon Advisory Committee on factors affecting emigrating smolts and returning adult salmon, with particular reference to the provisions of the Salmon Act 1986 and other legislation relating to dams and weirs; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: This report has been extremely helpful. As a result, I propose to consult further in the autumn on the provision of fish passes and fish screens, with a view to making regulations under the Salmon Act 1986.

Scottish Agricultural Science Agency

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the annual report and accounts of the Scottish Agricultural Science Agency for 1992-93.

Mr. Lang: I have today published the report, copies of which have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Courts

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what targets have been set for completing office business in the sheriff courts and supreme courts; and what performance was secured in 1992-93.

Mr. Lang: The targets set for completion of office business in the sheriff courts in 1992-93 are set out. These targets remain in force for 1993-94. The percentage figures following each target indicate the proportion of sheriff courts achieving the target figures or better in the course of the year. More detailed information on the performance of individual court offices will be made available to local court advisory committees. Similar targets are in force in the supreme courts and all of these were achieved in 1992-93.

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what objectives for reducing court waiting periods have been established; what targets have been set for 1993-94 in respect of court waiting periods for the supreme and sheriff courts; and if he will give details of the performance of the supreme courts and each of the sheriff courts in 1992-93.

Mr. Lang: The programming of court business is a matter for the judiciary. Acting in co-operation with the judiciary in the supreme and sheriff courts, the Government seek to provide the resources which will allow speedy access to justice. Having regard to the time required by parties to have their cases properly prepared, the following objectives have been adopted:

the Lord President of the Court of Session has accepted the recommendations of a committee chaired by Lord Maxwell relating to the reduction of waiting periods in the supreme courts: the target is to reduce waiting periods to the recommended levels and, subject to any acceleration in the rate of increase in court work, maintain waiting periods at that level: for certain categories of hearing, additional targets involving much reduced waiting periods, have been set; sheriffs principal have agreed to overall targets of reducing waiting periods for summary criminal trials in the sheriff courts to 12 weeks or less by the end of 1993-94 and to hold them at that level thereafter; and to maintain waiting periods at 12 weeks or less for civil cases in the sheriff courts.

The main targets for waiting periods for 1993-94 are set down—"waiting period" is the period between a trial or proof being requested or an appeal being received and the date assigned expressed in weeks. The same targets applied in 1992-93 and national performance for that year is noted in the second column.

	Target	1992-93 performance
Criminal Appeal Business
Summary prosecutions:
Notes of Appeal against Sentence and Stated cases (accused in custody)	4	4
Court of Session
(a) Ordinary proofs	24	20
(b) Defended Consistorial proofs	17	17
Sheriff Courts (national average)
(a) Civil proofs/debates	12	11·6
(b) Summary Criminal Trials	12	14·8

In 1992-93, waiting periods of 12 weeks or less were achieved for civil debates/proofs in 84 per cent. of sheriff courts.

Waiting periods of 12 weeks or less were achieved for summary criminal business in 72 per cent. of sheriff courts.

Performance of individual sheriff courts at 31 March 1993 is set out in the table:

In addition, the sheriffs principal have agreed that sheriff court programmes should be designed to ensure that the number of trials adjourned due to lack of court time should not exceed 5 per cent of the total number set down, a target met in 87 per cent of sheriff courts.

Council Tax

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the entitlement of a disabled person to reduction of council tax.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 14 July 1993]: There are several provisions designed to ensure that the council tax payable in respect of a disabled person's sole or main residence is not higher than it would be if the house was not that person's residence. These operate whether or not the disabled person is liable for payment of the council tax.

Any fixtures designed to make a house suitable for a person who is physically disabled must be ignored in the valuation of a house if they would tend to add to its value.

Many people with disabilities require extra space in the form of a second kitchen or bathroom, an extra room of another type or wheelchair circulation space. These features might tend to increase the valuation of a house and hence its council tax bill. To avoid this, a disabled person's home with any of these features is taxed as if it was in the valuation band below that shown in the valuation list. As houses in band A already carry the minimum bill, their occupants are not facing any increase due to someone's disability and no reduction falls to be made in their case.

Islands Shipping Services

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Aberdeen, South (Mr. Robertson) of 26 May, Official Report, column 589, if he will list the consultants which his Department has invited to tender for the studies into the financial assistance which he provides for lifeline shipping services and the organisation and structure of Caledonian MacBrayne; if he will require them to declare any actual or potential conflict of interest and to give a commitment not to use for any other purpose the information gleaned during the course of the study; if he will publish the terms of reference of the study; and if he will publish the report.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 19 July 1993]: The consultants who have been invited to tender for the review of shipping subsidies and study of options for the future organisation and structure of Caledonian MacBrayne are as follows:

Ash Consulting Group
Coopers and Lybrand
KPMG Management Consulting
Noble and Company Ltd.
PA Cambridge Economic Consultants Ltd.
Price Waterhouse
Quayle Munro Ltd.
Touche Ross and Co.

The consultants will be required to declare any actual or potential conflict of interest and due consideration will be given to this issue in deciding which consultants should be appointed to undertake the studies. The consultants will be bound by standard Scottish Office conditions of contract for consultancy services which require that confidential and commercially sensitive information obtained by reason of the contract shall not be disclosed for any other purpose. When the contract for this assignment is awarded, I shall arrange to place in the Library a copy of the terms of reference for the studies. The studies will necessarily involve examination of confidential and commerially sensitive information which it would not be appropriate to publish. However, the Scottish Office will discuss with the consultants the extent to which it would be possible to publish the findings and conclusions of the studies without breaching commercial confidentiality.

EDUCATION

General Studies

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is his policy with respect to supporting general studies as a full A-level with equal status to other subjects as regards university requirements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: Admission requirements are a matter for individual higher education institutions.

School Meals

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what research has been undertaken by his Department into the reintroduction of required standards for school meals.

Mr. Forth: The Department has not undertaken any research in this area.

Discretionary Student Grants

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to the oral answer to the hon. Member for Batley and Spen (Mrs. Peacock), Official Report of 13 July, column 822, if he will publish the figures held by his Department regarding discretionary grants; and if he will list the spending at 1992 prices on discretionary grant awards by each local education authority in the last five years for which figures are available, indicating the political control of each authority.

Mr. Boswell: Details of the numbers of and spending on discretionary awards by local education authorities are published in the Department's regular statistical bulletins, copies of which are in the Library. Information on expenditure on discretionary awards by each local education authority in England and Wales, at 1991-92 prices, for years between 1986-87 and 1990-91—the latest year for which a breakdown is available—is included in the table. Information for the academic year 1988-89 is not readily available and cannot be provided without incurring disproportionate costs. Details of the political control of each authority during that period can be found in the relevant volumes of the "Municipal Year Book", copies of which are in the Library.

PRIME MINISTER

Bermuda

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he has had with the Bermuda Government about bringing the law on consensual sexual relations between adult men in private into line with the legislative position in Britain.

The Prime Minister: This is primarily a matter for the Government of Bermuda. Nevertheless, I expressed my concerns about this issue to the Premier of Bermuda when we met on 14 July. The Premier indicated that the Bermuda Government may look further at this issue after their general election to be held before May 1994.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 22 July.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 22 July.

The Prime Minister: This morning, I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Olympic Bid

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister how many times (1) he has met the leaders of Manchester city council to discuss the bid to stage the Olympic games; (2) how much financial support the Government have committed to the Manchester bid to stage the Olympics; and how much money has so far been paid over.

The Prime Minister: I have met the leader of Manchester city council with other members of the bid committee three times to discuss the British Olympic bid; I launched the formal bid document with the committee at Downing street on 17 February; and I have met them informally on a number of other occasions.

Up to £75 million has been made available by the Government for the bid itself and for the construction of key facilities. Of that, some £22 million has been spent to date. If the bid is successful, the Government will ensure that all the necessary facilities are built by a mixture of private and public finances and that the funding necessary to stage and organise the games is provided.

Meetings

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister when he last met (a) Sheikh Zayed of Abu Dhabi and (b) the Pakistan high commissioner to the Court of St James.

The Prime Minister: I last met Sheikh Zayed of Abu Dhabi on 25 July 1989 when I was Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs. I last met the Pakistan high commissioner on 29 March this year.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Prime Minister what pressures Her Majesty's Government are putting on the Government of Bosnia-Herzegovina to attend and fully co-operate with the peace talks in Geneva; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: We are encouraging the Bosnian presidency to engage in direct negotiations with the other parties under the auspices of Lord Owen and Mr. Stoltenberg. We have repeatedly made clear that a lasting and equitable peace can be achieved only by a negotiated settlement freely agreed by all three parties. We will not accept a territorial solution for Bosnia dictated by the Serbs and Croats at the expense of the Bosnian Muslims.

Wild Birds

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what plans he has to discuss the EC directive on the conservation of wild birds at the forthcoming United Kingdom/French summit; and if he will make representations to the French Government over the fulfilment of the directive's protection for migratory birds from netting, shooting and trapping;

(2) what discussions he has had with the Prime Minister of France concerning the requirements under the EC directive on the conservation of wild birds to control the hunting and shooting of wild birds.

The Prime Minister: I am not aware of any proposals by the French Government for the admendment to the birds directive. Nor do I expect the matter to be raised at the meeting between Heads of State currently planned. There have been discussions by EC Environment Ministers on proposals by the Commission to amend annex III of the directive, but no agreement has yet been reached.

Security Service

Mr. Allason: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the directive circulated to former members of the security service regarding the biographer of the late Sir Dick White.

The Prime Minister: There is no authorised biographer of Sir Dick White. Although the Government have recently taken a number of significant steps towards greater openness for the security and intelligence services, they continue to attach the highest importance to maintaining the principle that members and former members of those services are under a lifelong duty of confidence to the Crown in relation to information deriving from their employment.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Tourism

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the developments that have so far been completed under the terms of the EC tourism operational programme; what proportion of those projects were funded by (a) Her Majesty's Government and (b) from EC sources; how many developments are yet to be completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Those projects assisted under the tourism operational programme for Northern Ireland 1990-93 which have been completed by 30 June 1993 are listed. Her Majesty's Government did not fund the projects which were assisted by the European regional development fund.

Select Committees

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the views given by the then Secretary of State for Northern Ireland to the Procedure Committee in its review of the working of Select Committees in Session 1989-90 on a Select Committee for Northern Ireland remain the Government's position.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: As the Government have repeatedly made clear, a Select Committee may, in principle, be desirable. But a number of issues, including the extent of support from elected representatives from both sides of the community in Northern Ireland, need to be considered. The Government keep the matter under review.

Sight Tests

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the estimated savings made in 1992-93 as a result of the introduction of a charge for sight tests.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many national health service eye examinations have been undertaken since 1985 in each health and social services board and in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 21 July 1993]: The number of health service sight tests undertaken in each year is shown in the table.

[1] From 1 April 1989 health service sight tests were restricted to certain groups in the population. The 1989 figures therefore include sight tests carried out under both the old and the new schemes. Consequently the 1989 figures are not directly comparable with those in 1990.

Eye Disease

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the incidence of eye disease leading to blindness or hospital treatment in Northern Ireland giving the numbers of people involved.

Mr. Ancram [holding reply 21 July 1993]: Information on the incidence of all eye disease is not available centrally.

Mr. Ancram [holding reply 21 July 1993]: The information is not available in the form requested. The numbers of blind and partially sighted people in contact with, or known to, health and social services boards are presented in the tables below. This includes some people who are not registered. LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Salmon

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment she has made of the degree to which the provisions of section 14 of the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act 1975, concerning the duties of proprietors of undertakings that take water to instal gratings of an approved type to prevent the passage of migratory fish, are being enforced; what consideration she has given in this context to the report of the Salmon Advisory Committee on factors affecting emigrating smolts and returning adults; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Responsibility for ensuring compliance with the requirements of section 14 of the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act 1975 rests largely with the National Rivers Authority. We will be discussing with it the question of enforcement of that provision in the light of the comments made by the Salmon Advisory Committee in its report.

Melatonin

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make a statement on the commercial use of melatonin in lamb production.

Mr. Soames: Melatonin is a naturally occurring substance which controls the ovulation cycle in ewes. Products containing melatonin can be administered to ewes to enable them to be mated earlier in the season before the usual peak of reproductive activity. Melatonin is classified as a veterinary medicine and all products containing it must be licensed under the Medicines Act 1968 before they can be made commercially available. One such product has been licensed, following a rigorous scrutiny of its efficacy, quality and safety, including safety to the animal. Melatonin is available on prescription only and must be used under the direction of a veterinary surgeon.

The Farm Animal Wefare Council is currently undertaking a study of the sheep industry. It will offer advice to the Government on the welfare of sheep and is expected to consider the use of substances such as melatonin. The results of the study are due by the end of the year.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many new cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy have been reported in (a) England and (b) Lancashire since the end of April.

Nuclear Waste

Mr Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the current and planned programmes undertaken by her Department to monitor the effect of the thermal oxide reprocessing plant's aerial and marine discharges on (a) seals and other marine mammals and (b) sea birds; and if she will make it her policy to publish the results of the monitoring undertaken at regular intervals.

Mr. Jack: A decision on whether THORP should be allowed to operate will not be made until after the further consultation announced on 28 June by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has been completed. In the light of that decision, I will review the need, if any, for changes to my Department's already extensive environmental monitoring programmes. The results of these programmes are reported annually and copies are placed in the Library of the House.

Pesticides

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met representatives from the Pesticide Exposure Group of Sufferers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: I met representatives of the Pesticide Exposure Group of Sufferers on 3 September 1992. A number of incidents relating to the safety of pesticides and sheep dips were discussed. I emphasised that it was important that those who discussed. I emphasised that it was important that those who believed themselves to have been adversely affected by exposure to pesticides should report the incident immediately to their local Health and Safety Executive office or, in the case of sheep dips, to the Veterinary Medicines Directorate—telephone No. 0932 336911 Ext 3040—and provide as much evidence as possible. It was only in this way that an incident could be properly investigated.

Sheep Dips

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many incidents arising from exposure to organophosphate sheep dips have been reported in (a) 1991 and (b) 1992; and what were the occupations of the people involved.

Mr. Soames: The following numbers of suspected adverse reaction reports to organophosphorus sheep dips involving humans have been received by the Veterinary Medicines Directorate:

Mr. Soames: The information requested is as follows:

TRANSPORT

Motorways

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects (a) the M65 to M6/M61 link, (b) the widening of the M6 between junctions with the M61 and M55 and (c) the widening of the M6 between the junctions with the M56 and M62 to be completed.

Mr. Key: For (a) construction is planned to start early next year and is expected to take three years to complete; for (b) work is in progress and is expected to be completed by December 1994; and for (c) work is again in progress with completion expected in spring 1996.

Continental Freight Depots

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which sites have been designated as continental freight depots; and when construction will commence.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail has selected nine sites, at Glasgow (Mossend), Teesside (Wilton), Wakefield, Manchester (Trafford Park), Liverpool, Birmingham (Landor Street), Cardiff, London (Stratford) and London (Willesden).

Birmingham, Cardiff, Liverpool and Teesside are existing terminals. Trafford Park and Willesden are all but completed. Work at Glasgow is expected to start within the next two months. Construction of the terminal at Wakefield will commence once agreement is reached between BR and its development partners. Stratford will come on stream once demand warrants a second terminal to serve London and the south-east.

Disabled Passenger Scheme

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, what are the expected savings to be made from the repeal of the disabled passenger scheme.

Mr. Key: I understand the saving will be in the region of £500,000 in the first year, based on the approximate annual number of new applications.

Current beneficiaries under this scheme will not lose their entitlement to exemption from vehicle excise duty as a result of the repeal.

Severn Bridge

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the changes in transport movements across the Severn bridge in each of the last three years; and what assessment he has made on the effects of price increases.

Mr. Key: The following figures are for traffic crossing the bridge westbound from England to Wales:

Period	Number of vehicles (millions)
May 1990 to April 1991	9·3
May 1991 to April 1992	9·5
May 1992 to April 1993	8·8

It is not at present possible to isolate the effects of toll increases. The increases in April 1992 coincided with the introduction of one-way tolling. It is likely that this will have reduced westbound traffic and increased eastbound traffic.

Arrangments are in hand to monitor traffic from Wales to England.

World Heritage Sites

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many new roads have been built across world heritage sites in Britain in the past five years.

Mr. Key: None in England. Roads in Scotland and Wales are the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Scotland and the Secretary of State for Wales respectively.

Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 15 July, Official Report column 587, what is the average cost to the DVLA of supplying a printout to a magistrates court of a driver's licence history needed to assist in sentencing; what is the average delay between receipt of a requests from a magistrate's court and the printout being supplied; and what would be the capital and running costs of supplying magistrates courts with live terminals to enable them to obtain the information themselves.

Mr. Key: The current average cost to DVLA for a driver licence printout is £1. Most printouts are despatched from DVLA within five working days of receipt of the request. The cost of supplying magistrates courts with terminals to enable them to obtain the information direct is a matter for My right hon. and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor. Such a system would add approximately £0·5 million to DVLA's annual running costs.

Airports

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he received the report of the RUCATSE working group into south-east runway capacity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I have now received the report. It is a thorough and useful piece of work which will help set the framework for an informed debate on this important subject. The report deals with the issue of the possible need for more runway capacity in the south-east; the timing of that need; and sets out the advantages and disadvantages of development at a number of sites. It makes no recommendations about which site should be developed.

A feature of the working group was its particularly wide-ranging membership. Local area representatives, environmental groups and the air transport industry have all been associated with the analysis set out in the report. I am sure that this diversity will make the report all the more useful. I therefore want to thank all those involved for the time and energy they have devoted to the work.

I am today putting a copy of the report in the Library of the house and will send copies to members with constituencies near those sites subject to detailed assessment.

Given the importance of this subject, I will attach particular weight to the consultation process which begins today. I invite all those with an interest in the subject to let my Department know their views on the issues raised in this report by the end of May 1994.

Motorway Charging

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress is being made by his Department in technological methods of charging cars for the use of motorways, with particular reference to electronic charging on motorways funded by the private sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The Green Paper, "Paying for Better Motorways" (Cm 2200), which was published on 26 May, describes a number of possible systems of electronic charging for motorways. We keep in close contact with technological developments in this country and abroad. In particular Department of Transport representatives participate in the relevant European bodies undertaking research and development standards for possible future applications.

M25

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has anything to add to his answer of 19 July concerning the additional flows of vehicles on the M25 motorway expected from the construction of a single additional lane; and what approximate increase he expects in vehicle flows in vehicles per hour and in overall percentage terms.

Mr. Key: I have nothing to add to my answer of 19 July, Official Report, columns 75-76.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies he has made of delays on motorways occasioned by various factors, other than traffic demand; and if he will now make a comprehensive study of all causes of delay on the M25 before authorising public expenditure on additional lanes or new parallel roads.

Mr. Key: Studies have been made of roadworks sites from which estimates of delays can be made. We also currently have a research contract running to study the effects of incidents, for example, accidents and breakdowns, on the operation of motorways generally which will enable delays due to such incidents to be estimated.

I have no plans for a study of delays for the M25.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measurements have been made of delays to vehicles wishing to join the M25 motorway between its intersections with the M3 and M40, other than those occasioned by accidents, shed loads, roadworks or other non-demand factors.

Mr. Key: No measurements have been made of delays to traffic wishing to join the M25 between its junctions with the M3 and M40 from any causes.

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about his plans for improving the M25.

Mr. MacGregor: The M25 is the hub of the national motorway network. Many other motorways—M1, M40, M4, M3, M23, M20, M11 and A1(M) lead off it. It is, therefore, a key component in the movement of long-distance national and international traffic, in particular by enabling traffic from the midlands and the north of England to reach the south-east and the channel without going through London. It is essential for our industry and commerce, upon which we depend for our further economic prosperity, that it should work effectively. Besides its national importance, it is also very important at the regional level, playing a major part in the economic development of the south-east.

This importance is reflected in its very heavy use. The White Paper "Roads for Prosperity", published in May 1989, announced plans to widen the whole of the motorway to dual four-lane standard as part of the motorway widening programme. Work on this is proceeding. Widening between junctions 15 and 16 is currently in progress and earlier this year we consulted local interests on our proposals for widening within existing highway boundaries between junctions 7 and 8 and 10 and 11.

However, it has become clear that on certain sections in particular traffic volumes have been rising and will continue to rise to the point where dual four lanes will not be enough to prevent chronic congestion. This problem is particularly acute on the section between junctions 12 and 15—between the M3 and the M4. That is why, as a first phase, we published in June 1992 proposals for dual three-lane link roads to augment the existing dual four-lane road. Although these proposals were welcomed in some quarters, they attracted understandable concern in others, particularly from those living near the motorway. I have, therefore, considered very carefully all the issues raised by those who question the justification for these proposals. My conclusion is that the balance of public interest lies in taking these proposals forward and that the link roads should proceed to the next stage in the statutory process.

In reaching my conclusion, I have looked particularly carefully at alternatives to the link road proposals. I do not believe that any of these would be an adequate response to the magnitude of the problem. Even with improved traffic management, such as the pilot scheme I have recently announced for controlled motorway operation, additional capacity will be needed. Without it, heavy lorries and other long-distance traffic will increasingly divert to the local road network to the point where conditions become intolerable for local people. Nor is increased use of rail transport a feasible option; there are no existing lines able to cope with the variety of journeys of those using the motorway and it is unrealistic to consider building new lines, nor would they match up to requirements. The link roads, moreover, are designed for purposes other than commuting and other journeys into London.

Junctions 12 to 15 present the most pressing problem, which we have addressed first. But junctions 15 to 16 between the M4 and the M40 will also present a serious congestion problem in future, even after current widening to four lanes is completed. I am therefore today launching a public consultation on link roads on this stretch as well.

However, in deciding to proceed to public inquiry for junctions 12 to 15 and to launch a public consultation for junctions 15 to 16, I can give a number of assurances.

First, I have no plans for similiar link roads around the whole of the motorway. I forsee no need at all for widening beyond D4 between junctions 3 to 10 and junctions 21 to 30. I cannot rule out the need for widening beyond D4 on the remaining stretches—junctions 10 to 12, junctions 16 to 21 and junctions 30 to 3. The need for this will not become clear until future work has been carried out by consultants and any proposals would not necessarily be in the form of dual three-lane link roads. A solution involving fewer additional lanes might be acceptable.

Secondly, I am determined that the greatest attention should be given to the environmental aspects of the proposals. The fact that we are intending to devote some two thirds of the land taken on junctions 12 to 15 to mitigation measures, including extensive landscaping and planting, not only shows my enthusiam for this but means that there will be considerable landscaping and noise barrier improvements over the existing section. And the proposals will naturally be subject to a very full environmental impact assessment in conformity with EC directives and the Department's new manual of environmental assessment, which can be considered at the inquiry.

Thirdly, my intention to proceed with the link roads does not imply any diminution in the Government's committment in the regional strategy for the south-east to encourage investment to the east of London. We have a very substantial programme of investment in road improvements to the east to which we shall continue to give high priority within the public spending constraints we face. For example, work is starting this year on the £200 million Hackney-M11 link.

Fourthly, the Government continue to be strongly committed to improving conditions for rail users on Network SouthEast and users of other public transport.

Last year, investment in London Transport and Network SouthEast was running at three times that in roads in London. The citizens charter commits us to improving conditions for both road and rail users and I intend to honour this commitment.

The Government are currently consulting on the introduction of charges or tolls for the motorway network —"Paying for Better Motorways", Cm. 2200. No decisions have yet been taken, but if the Government decide to pursue a policy of charging or tolling and the necessary legislation is passed by Parliament, the M25, including the link roads, could be part of the charged network. I do not expect any motorway charging system that might be introduced in the future to remove the urgent need to increase the capacity of these already over-used sections of the M25. Depending on the results of the consultation exercise and subsequent decisions and legislation, these and other motorways widening schemes could also be candidates for private financing.

A copy of the detailed departmental response to the proposals for junctions 12 to 15 has been placed in the Library. Copies have already been circulated to those who commented and other interested parties. Copies of the public consultation document on junctions 15 to 16 are also available.

Crossrail

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to the reactivation, or construction of additional stations on the proposed alignment of the Crossrail link between Westbourne Park and Wembley Park, with particular reference to those providing interchange with main bus routes.

Mr. Norris: It is for the promoters of the CrossRail Bill to consider whether such stations would be justified in operational and financial terms. I understand that several possible station sites are being considered.

Land Compensation Act 1973

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much compensation has been paid by his Department under part I of the Land Compensation Act 1973 for each of the past five years.

Mr. Key: The amounts paid in recent years are £9·6 million in 1989-90, £36·1 million in 1990-91, £31·1 million in 1991-92 and £36·5 million in 1992-93. I regret that information for 1988-89 and earlier years is not readily available.

Rail Tracks

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what safety training is given to contractors' staff working on British Rail tracks; and what assessment he has made as to the adequacy of these arrangements.

Mr. Freeman: Contractors' staff working on British Rail tracks receive the same thorough safety training as British Rail employees exposed to the same risks. Improving the safety of all personnel working on tracks is a strategic objective in British Rail's safety plan. The Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate monitors the safety arrangements for railway employees and contractors.

Alcohol-related Offences

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in what circumstances (a) EC nationals and (b) non-EC nationals may legally drive in the United Kingdom while banned from driving for alcohol-related offences in their own countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The removal of the right to drive in another member state or other non-EC country applies only in that jurisdiction. Drivers banned in other countries may drive here provided they are not banned in the United Kingdom. Work has recently started under European political co-operation in the judicial co-operation working group on criminal matters to explore the possibility of an agreement which would mean that a driver disqualified from driving in one member state would not be able to drive elsewhere in the Community.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in what circumstances persons banned from driving by British courts for alcohol-related offences may legally drive in other EC countries during the period of their suspension; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The jurisdiction of the British courts only applies to this country. Drivers banned here may legally drive elsewhere in the European Community.

Peter and Michael Whiting

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the deaths of Peter and Michael Whiting at Ospringe bridge on 14 July.

Mr. Freeman: I much regret to report that at 14.45 on Wednesday 14 July two contractors were struck and killed by the 13.35 Victoria to Dover Western Docks train while working at Ospringe Road bridge, Faversham. The contractors were employed by Lowery of Ashford. Network SouthEast is conducting an internal inquiry into the accident. An inspecting officer from the Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate also attended the scene and made inquiries. HSE will consider the findings of these investigations and decide whether any action is necessary.

British Rail

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) British Rail staff and (b) contractors' staff have been killed in the course of their duties in each of the past five years.

Mr. Freeman: The Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate maintains records of railways accidents and casualties. However, its records do not differentiate between railway operator and contractors' staff, nor do they readily differentiate between railway operators.

Fatalities in respect of railway and contractors' staff for the latest available five-year period are:

	Number
1988	16
1989	18
[1]1991-92	17

[1]The 1991-92 period runs from April 1991 to March 1992. There were five fatalities in the first three months of 1991.

WALES

Disabled Children

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement outlining the progress made to date by local authorities in Wales on maintaining registers of disabled children; and when he expects the first registers to be completed.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Two local authorities indicate that registers have been established. Two authorities hope to complete the register within six to nine months. Another is writing to parents seeking consent to inclusion of children's names on the register and cannot predict the date of completion. Three authorities plan inter-agency consultation later this year to establish unified registers.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what research has been undertaken by his Department concerning the availability of locally based respite care facilities for children with disabilities in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The range of local respite care services in Wales was identified in paragraphs 3.11-3.14 of the report of a survey undertaken by social services inspectorate, Wales in August 1991 on "Organisation of Services to Children with a Disability".

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the number of local authorities in Wales which (a) provide advice and counselling to children with disabilities and their parents, (b) prepare children with disabilities for independence, (c) provide respite care for children with disabilities and (d) provide full-time accommodation for children with disabilities.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: All authorities have indicated that they provide these services.

Organophosphate Poisoning

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the number of patients treated within hospitals in Wales for organophosphate poisoning by health authority area in each year since 1987.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Based on information supplied by hospitals, the number of discharges and deaths of people treated as in-patients or day cases in NHS hospitals in Wales for toxic effects of organophosphate and carbamate for the years requested is given as follows:

Discharges and deaths of in-patients and day cases treated for toxic effect of organophosphate and carbamate[1]

Health Authority of residence	1987	1988	1989	1990
Clwyd	2	1	—	—
Gwent	2	—	—	1
Mid Glamorgan	—	—	—	1
South Glamorgan	1	—	—	1
West Glamorgan	2	1	—	—

[1] Figures may understate the true position in that not all hospitals supply complete medical details on patient discharges and deaths.

Speech Therapists

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the ratio of schoolchildren aged between three and 19 years to speech therapists in each local education authority in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not centrally available.

Respite Care

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the local authorities in Wales who provide respite care (a) within the context of planned packages of care, (b) as relief care only and (c) on an emergency basis.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: All local authorities in Wales arrange respite care as (a) planned packages of care, (b) relief care only and (c) on an emergency basis, and all identified respite care in different forms as part of their social care plans and within their plans under the mental handicap and mental illness strategies.

Village Halls

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide additional funds to assist village halls in Wales to implement the requirements of (a) the Children Act 1989 and (b) EC directives on hygiene.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Financial support to village halls is available under a number of schemes, including the strategic development scheme, the capital grants to voluntary youth services, village halls and community centres programme, and the social grants scheme operated by the Development Board for Rural Wales. Expenditure incurred for the purposes of compliance with the Children Act and EC directives on food hygiene is eligible for consideration under these schemes; and is funded from within existing provision.

Decisions on resources available under these schemes for 1994-95 have not yet been taken.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to introduce measures enabling patients awaiting hospital treatment to transfer from hospitals with longer waiting lists for that particular treatment, to hospitals with shorter waiting lists.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: General practitioners already have the ability to refer patients to hospitals, or consultants, with the shortest waiting lists. The waiting times information service and Health Line Wales have been established to provide patients and GPs with accurate and up-to-date information on waiting times.

The decision to refer a patient to a particular hospital or consultant depends upon many factors, however. These include not only the length of the waiting list but also the suitability of the treatment available and the patient's own wishes. Where appropriate, I hope that general practitioners will seek to pursue the shortest waiting lists for their patients.

Pensioners

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many persons of pensionable age were revealed in the 1991 census in Wales.

Mr. Redwood: The 1991 census recorded 570,932 persons of pensionable age resident in Wales.

Secure Unit Report

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 8 July, Official Report, column 273, whether the consultant's report on the proposed new secure unit in south Wales has now been received; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The joint Welsh Office and local authority working party has wholeheartedly adopted the feasibility report of its consultants, submitted to it at its meeting on 16 July. The report clearly recommended a site in west Glamorgan for the location of the proposed regional secure unit and it is now for that authority to consider the report before submitting a grant application to the Welsh Office. I very much hope that they come to an early decision to proceed so that work on the new unit can commence as quickly as possible.

Development Board for Rural Wales

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to lay before Parliament regulations to govern the disposal of the housing stock owned by the Development Board for Rural Wales.

Mr. Redwood: The Local Government and Housing Act 1989 empowers me to make regulations to govern the disposal of housing stock owned by the Development Board for Rural Wales. I have today laid such regulations before the House.

In December 1991, draft regulations for this purpose were subject to public consultation. In framing these proposals, due consideration was given to existing provisions for disposal of new town housing in England, but also to the fact that the board owns houses in four different local authority areas; to the very sizeable proportion of the total social rented housing stock in Mid-Wales that the board's stock represents; to matters of timing; and to the likelihood of a continued role for the board in promoting development in its areas after the disposal of its housing stock.

Views were sought on the questions of the appropriate way to decide the outcome of any formal consultation, that is to say whether the outcome should reflect the majority view or the individual preference of all who vote.

All the responses to the public consultation have been carefully considered.

I have decided upon some changes to the draft regulations featured in that consultation, and to act upon certain comments through administrative means as and when appropriate.

A list of those who responded has been placed in the Library of the House. Most respondents who commented on the matter believed that the outcome of a formal consultation should reflect the majority view. Having considered this, I, too, am now persuaded by arguments that this will be appropriate in the mid-Wales context, will be simple, and will encourage serious prospective landlords to come forward, thus giving tenants the greatest choice reasonably possible. The regulations which I have laid before Parliament provide for this.

I expect the disposal process to take approximately two years to complete and shall task the board to publish a proposed timetable.

Under the regulations, the board's housing will be sold to social landlords—housing associations or local authorities—and will be available for social renting. Housing associations will be able to meet the price by borrowing against the expected net income. Local authorities will be issued with supplementary credit approvals to cover the purchase price, if they are successful.

In all this, tenants' interests will be respected. Those who transfer to local authorities will remain secure tenants, benefiting from the rights described in my council tenants charter. Those who transfer to housing associations will become assured tenants, and benefit from the rights secured through the tenants guarantee issued by Housing for Wales. Existing tenants' right to buy will continue in each case.

The flexi-ownership scheme operated by the board will be discontinued. An earlier consultation on proposals to introduce a national rents-to-mortgages scheme for council tenants, sought views on whether it should extend to secure tenants who transfer to housing associations. Our conclusion in the light of the responses we received was that it should not, so the statutory scheme will apply only to tenants who transfer to local authorities.

I do not expect that all the board's stock will be disposed of to a single new landlord; its geographical spread makes this unlikely. Terms of all disposals will be subject to negotiations between board and prospective new landlords.

In the regulations, I have provided for tenants' views to be taken into account in drawing up the short-list of prospective landlords for each parcel of stock, and in deciding how the stock should be divided; and, of course, for their collective wishes to decide the outcome of any contest between prospective landlords. I propose to provide funds for the tenants to receive professional advice throughout the process of disposal to underpin the exercise of their legal rights.

The development board will have the responsibility, under the regulations, to transact the business of disposal, but all disposals will be subject to my consent, as the statute requires.

Subsequent disposals of stock by a new landlord will also be subject to my consent, other than exempt disposals such as to a sitting tenant with the right to buy. My consent for a subsequent disposal will be given only if there is good reason for it.

The board will remain able to promote mid-Wales development effectively after disposal of its housing. We shall continue to address requirements for new social housing in mid-Wales, primarily through Housing for Wales and locally active housing associations, whatever the outcome of the disposal process.

The provisions which I have laid before the House will ensure expeditious and appropriate disposal of the board's stock; will secure tenants' interests, offer them the greatest choice reasonably possible, and respect their collective wishes; and will permit continued effective promotion of mid-Wales development.

ENVIRONMENT

Composting Scheme, Kirklees

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to monitor the composting scheme introduced by Kirklees council.

Mr. Baldry: The Kirklees scheme, which has been supported by my Department's supplementary credit approvals programme, is one of a number of imaginative composting schemes being run by local authorities and other organisations throughout the country.

We are currently reviewing our programme of work on monitoring pilot recycling collection schemes. As part of this review, we will consider whether to include composting schemes such as the one introduced by Kirklees council.

Council Rents

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the increase in average council rents between 1989-90 and 1993-94.

Mr. Baldry: The estimated average weekly unrebated rent for local authority dwellings in England in 1989-90 was £20·86 and the provisional figure for 1993-94 is £33·54, an increase of 61 per cent.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the local authorities which have written to his Department in support of a new public inquiry into any proposed discharge authorisation associated with the development of THORP.

Mr. Yeo: The information which the hon. Member requests is not readily available. I assure him, however, that all the relevant correspondence has been read and considered and the views expressed will be taken into account in the deliberations of my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for the Environment and the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Disabled Facilities Grant

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to extend the scope of works covered by the disabled facilities grant.

Mr. Baldry: None. Disabled facilities grants are already available for a wide range of mandatory and discretionary adaptation works to benefit disabled people.

Outer-city Areas

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research his Department has commissioned or conducted into the specific problems encountered by outer-city areas.

Mr. Baldry: In managing its sizeable research effort the Department recognises the need to identify problems wherever they occur. Much of the research it commissions on housing renewal and urban regeneration as well as land use planning is relevant to the various problems encountered in outer-city areas. Individual studies are listed in the Department's annual newsletters, which are available in the House of Commons Library.

Organochlorines

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research has been undertaken by his Department upon the effect of organochlorines on aquatic ecosystems.

Mr. Yeo: Organochlorines have an extremely wide diversity of forms and uses and many occur naturally. Environmental concern about their aquatic effects relates to those substances which might be particularly toxic, persistent or bioaccumulative, as reflected in lists I and II of EC directive 76/464 on dangerous substances discharged into the aquatic environment and in the new north-east Atlantic convention.

The Department has a programme of research directed at establishing environmental quality standards for priority substances of this nature where these have not been suitably researched within the EC programme of work. This includes consideration of a variety of organnochlorines. Reports of the research studies are widely available through the Department Library.

Housing (Disabled People)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what instruction will be issued by his Department to local authorities to meet the housing needs of disabled people in their arrangements for community care.

Mr. Baldry: My Department and the Department of Health jointly issued guidance to English local authorities about their role under the community care arrangements in circular 10/92, "Housing and Community Care", on 24 September 1992. A copy of the circular is in the Library of the House.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action has been undertaken to date by his Department resulting from the Ernst and Young research report into the housing needs of disabled people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The study of the housing needs of elderly and disabled people commissioned by the Department from Ernst and Young management consultants has now been completed and a series of reports on discrete elements of the project are being prepared. The intention is to publish a summary report later this year and provide the individual reports on request. It is also proposed to produce guidance to local housing authorities on methods for assessing the housing needs of elderly people and the comparative costs of different housing and housing with care options to meet their needs.

My Department will also be publishing the findings from a separate but related study, to which Ernst and Young contributed, on the role of housing agency service in enabling disabled people to remain in the community or transfer out of institutions. It is planned to publish this report next month.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional resources have been made available to local authorities towards meeting the housing needs of disabled people resulting from the implementation of community care.

Mr. Baldry: Community care in itself creates no new category of entitlement to housing and housing needs which are identified by community care planning and individual assessments should be considered alongside existing processess and local priorities. The resources available to authorities should allow the proper discharge of their responsibilities to all sections of the community.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those projects in the west midlands region that have received city grant funding in each year since 1988.

Building and Fire Advisory Committees

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library copies of the minutes of meetings of the Buildings Regulations Advisory Committee and the Fire Advisory Panel.

Mr. Baldry: No. Both the Buildings Regulations Advisory Committee and the Fire Advisory Panel are appointed to advise my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on matters relating to the Building Regulations. Such advice is confidential, as are the minutes of their meetings recording the discussions leading to that advice.

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authority-owned houses were empty at the last date at which figures were available; what information he has on the length of time they had been vacant; what is his estimate of the rent forgone for each local authority during the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: At 1 April 1992 the number of local authority owned properties in England that were empty and available for letting, either immediately or after minor works—that is, excluding dwellings awaiting major works or due to be sold or demolished—was 40,400, representing 1·1 per cent. of all local authority dwellings.

The available information on the length of time these dwellings had been vacant is as follows:

Time vacant	Number of dwellings vacant
Three weeks or less	15,400
Over three weeks but not more than six weeks	8,900
Over six weeks but not more than six months	10,600
Over six months but not more than one year	2,400
Over one year	3,200
Total	40,400

The number of empty local authority dwellings available for letting, either immediately or after minor works fell substantially between April 1990, when it stood at 51,500—1·3 per cent. of all dwellings—and April 1992 as a result of improved management performance by local authorities.

Estimates are not compiled centrally of the rent forgone while dwellings are vacant.

Accessible Housing

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what instructions will be issued to housing departments' building control and planning authorities by his Department to clarify their relationships and respective responsibilities with regard to the provision of accessible housing.

Mr. Baldry: The Building Regulations Advisory Committee is currently studying the desirability and practicability of extending part M of the Building Regulations, covering access for disabled people, to cover dwellings. Once I have received that advice I will consider what further guidance is given to local authorities.

Local Authorities (Gas Supplies)

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he holds as to how many local authorities in England now receive all or part of their gas supply from a supplier other than British Gas.

Mr. Baldry: None.

Councillors—Electors Ratio

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines have been given to the Commission reviewing local government about the optimum councillor/elector ratio.

Mr. Baldry: None. The ratio of councillors to electors must be as nearly as possible the same in every electoral division or ward in an authority. Beyond that, it is a matter for the commission's judgment in each review area.

Local Government Review, Durham

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will ensure the results of the MORI poll commissioned by the Local Government Commission in relation to Durham are published immediately upon completion of the poll.

Mr. Baldry: Decisions on publication are for MORI and the Local Government Commission.

Council Tax

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the environment (1) what is his latest estimate of the total number in each council tax band in England of (a) dwellings, (b) exempt dwellings, (c) chargeable dwellings that are subject to a disabled reduction, (d) diplomats dwellings, (e) chargeable dwellings entitled to a single discount for the purposes of council tax, (f) chargeable dwellings that are entitled to two discounts for the purposes of council tax and (g) total equivalent number of dwellings after discounts, exemptions, and disabled relief;

(2) what is his latest estimate of the number of band D equivalents in each council tax band in England;

(3) what is his latest estimate of the number of dwellings on the valuation list in England that were exempt in each class A to Q.

Mr. Gummer: The statistical returns from local authorities which contain the information requested are currently being processed. I will provide the information as soon as it is available.

Rent-a-room Scheme

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many rooms have been let under the rent-a-room scheme; and how many of these rooms have come into letting since the scheme began;

(2) if he will identify the cost of the rent-a-room scheme in its first year of operation; and what the anticipated cost is for 1993-94.

Mr. Baldry: Information about the number of rooms let under the rent-a-room scheme can only be obtained from housing surveys. Information about the cost of the scheme can only be obtained from a special analysis of tax returns. Data are not available from either source yet.

There are no forecasts of the costs in either 1992-93 or 1993-94.

City Challenge

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many city challenge projects he has visited.

Mr. Baldry: Since he took up office, the Secretary of State has visited a number of city challenge projects. City challenge partnerships also receive regular visits from the sponsor Minister and other Ministers in this Department.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many city challenge authorities have now initiated exit strategies.

Mr. Baldry: Many city challenge partnerships have begun to plan their exit strategies. My Department will be issuing guidance on this in due course, and we expect partnerships to consider their strategies in the light of that.

Social Housing

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the space and standard requirements for new social housing development schemes.

Mr. Baldry: There are no space requirements for new social housing development schemes. Other standards, which the Housing Corporation requires as a condition of grant or loan to housing associations, are set out in part 4 of the Housing Corporation's procedure guide. A copy of this guide has been placed in the Library.

Housing Corporation

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to be able to respond to the recommendations made by the Environment Committee in its second report of Session 1992-93 on the Housing Corporation, HC 466.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend is currently considering the Select Committee's report and expects to produce a full response shortly after the summer recess.

Nuclear Waste

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates have been made of the health risks to the United Kingdom population from the proposal by British Nuclear Fuels for substitution of wastes equivalent to quantities of high-level waste.

Mr. Yeo: The Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee's views were sought on the likely radiological and environmental impact for the United Kingdom of British Nuclear Fuels' proposals for waste substitution. As I have said in the answer I gave on 28 June to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith), Official Report, columns 387-88, RWMAC has been asked to do further work.

Water Prices

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what has been the increase in water prices in England in (a) cash and (b) real terms since water privatisation;

(2) what has been the increase in water prices in England in (a) cash and (b) real terms since 1979.

Mr. Yeo: Between 1979-80 and 1989-90 the average domestic water rate bill increased nationally by 187 per cent. in cash terms—a real terms increase of 45·2 per cent.

Since privatisation, the weighted average increase in water charges in England in cash terms has been 52·1 per cent.—a real terms increase of 21·2 per cent.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the increases in water prices in the areas served by (a) the Mid Kent Water Company and (b) the West Kent Water Company in (i) cash and (ii) real terms since water privatisation.

Mr. Yeo: Since privatisation, the increase in water charges in Mid Kent Water Company's area in cash terms has been 55·3 per cent.—a real terms increase of 24·2 per cent. The increase in water charges in West Kent Water Company's area in cash terms has been 84·9 per cent.—a real terms increase of 49·8 per cent.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to change the guidelines for the current review of local government structure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: We are always ready to consider whether the guidance which we have issued to the Local Government Commission needs updating or clarifying.

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the timetable for implementing local government reorganisation in the first tranche of local authorities.

Mr. Baldry: We have announced that any new structure for the Isle of Wight would be implemented on 1 April 1995. The timing of implementation in other first tranche areas will depend on the nature of the final recommendations.

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the future of the review and reorganisation of local government in Cleveland.

Mr. Baldry: The Local Government Commission is currently preparing its final report on the review of Cleveland and Durham, which is due to be submitted by 21 November. The Secretary of State will then consider whether the recommendations should be implemented. The final decision on any changes rests with Parliament.

Water Quality

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list each of the items of EC legislation concerning the cleanliness of water that the United Kingdom is legally bound to implement; and if he will list for each item whether the United Kingdom supported or opposed it at a vote in the EC.

Mr. Yeo: With one exception, the directives relating to water quality listed below were adopted by unanimity under the provisions of the treaty of Rome. The titanium dioxide directive (92/112/EEC) was adopted by a qualified majority with United Kingdom support. In many, if not all, cases, changes will have been made in negotiation at the request of the United Kingdom.

Companies (Local Authority Interests)

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to take powers to regulate companies in which local authorities have interests under part V of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend will be going out to consultation shortly on proposals designed to implement the provision of part V of the 1989 Act on this subject.

Local Government Commission

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to amend the terms of reference, working methods or personnel of the Local Government Commission.

Mr. Baldry: The Local Government Commission's terms of reference are laid down in the Local Government Act 1992. In carrying out its reviews, the commission must have regard both to the requirements of section 15 of the Act, and of the procedural guidance which we have issued to it. It is otherwise free to determine its own working methods. The commission is responsible for making its own staffing arrangements. We have no current plans to make fresh appointments to the commission.

Wild Birds

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the French authorities regarding any relaxation of controls on the hunting and trapping of wild birds.

Mr. Yeo: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave to him earlier today.

Cornwall (Storm Damage)

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide financial assistance to local authorities in Cornwall to compensate them for emergency work undertaken as a result of damage caused by storms and floods during the period 9 to 12 June.

Mr. Baldry: Yes. My right hon. Friend is satisfied that financial relief under the Bellwin scheme would be justified in this case because of the exceptional nature of the flooding in Cornwall. Accordingly, the Secretary of State has decided, with the consent of the Treasury, to establish a scheme of assistance under section 155 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 in respect of expenditure relating to damage caused by the storms and floods in Cornwall in June 1993. Grant will be paid to reimburse local authorities for 85 per cent. of eligible costs incurred above threshold. North Cornwall district council had advised the Department that it has incurred expenditure above its threshold. It is expected that grant to that authority is likely to be in the region of £16,000.

Crown Office Buildings, Edinburgh

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to sell, or otherwise dispose of, the Crown Office building, the Old Royal high school, in Edinburgh.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 9 June 1993]: The future use of the Old Royal high school in Edinburgh is being given active consideration by Property Holdings which is in discussion with the Scottish Office on the possibility of its continued use by the Scottish Grand Committee. No decision has yet been taken.

DEFENCE

Infantry Battalions

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future location of the two additional infantry battalions he announced on 3 February, Official Report, column 320.

Mr. Hanley: A number of options for providing sufficient accommodation to house the two additional infantry battalions have been examined. I am pleased to announce I have decided that Sir John Moore barracks, Shorncliffe, which would otherwise have been disposed of as a result of the cessation of infantry junior leaders training there, will be retained in the Army estate as one of the two new permanent infantry barracks required.

Possible locations for a second infantry barracks are still under review.

Training

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made on improving provision for Army special-to-arm and service, and career, training.

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. Friend the Member for Epsom and Ewell (Mr. Hamilton) announced on 16 December 1992, Official Report, column 335-36, the principles for further restructuring the training organisation and improving provision for special to arm and service and career training. It is our intention, where possible, that such training will be concentrated in single centres with any further training done at the minimum number of wings. This part of the review is nearly complete and we now need to begin detailed planning.

We propose that the training of the Royal Armoured Corps should be concentrated at Bovington, although gunnery training would continue to be carried out at Lulworth and Castlemartin. Training of the Royal Artillery would be concentrated at Larkhill, with firing training being carried out, as at present, at the ranges at Manorbier and the Hebrides. Training of the Royal Engineers would be concentrated at Chatham with a wing at Minley and some minor facilities at Chattenden. Training of the Royal Signals would, as outlined on 16 December 1992, be concentrated at Blandford and as a result the operational signals regiment currently located there would transfer to Bramcote and the defence automatic data processing training centre would move in the short term to the Royal College of Military Science at Shrivenham. The transfer of the Royal Signals from Catterick would allow the infrantry to concentrate special to arm training there with subsequent career and instructor training being carried out at both Warminster and Brecon.

Training of the Royal Logistic Corps would be mainly done at Deepcut, with apprentice and catering training at Aldershot. The training of drivers would be concentrated at Leconfield. Training of the Royal Electrical and Mechanical Engineers would be concentrated at Arborfield with a wing at Bordon. This would also include the relocation of the School of Aeronautical Engineering from Middle Wallop to Arborfield. The training of Army medical services would be carried out at Mytchett. Further work is in hand on the location of training for the Adjutant Generals Corps and of adventurous training.

Changes resulting from earlier measures to rationalise Army training at a smaller number of centres, thus reducing overheads, are already under way and we propose that this next phase should begin in early 1994. It is planned that some barracks affected by these proposals would pass to the Field Army, but the training facilities at Harrogate, Ouston, Strensall and Church Crookham and parts of Chattenden, Netheravon and Deepcut would no longer be required. We will be examining the potential for alternative defence uses for these establishments. It is not therefore possible at this stage to say what the detailed implications for civilian staff might be.

Full consultation with the trade unions on the above proposals will take place in the normal way before final decisions are taken.

AWE Aldermaston

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what research AWE Aldermaston is conducting into methods for decommissioning radioactive plant and buildings on site.

Mr. Aitken: AWE has a continuing research and development programme to define and improve techniques and equipment for decommissioning radioactive plant and buildings on site. The work ranges from developing decontamination and size reduction techniques through to applications involving equipment for waste classification.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the toxic chemicals used and discharged into the environment by AWE Aldermaston that appear on the AEC black list and the United Kingdom Government's Red List of toxic chemicals.

Mr. Aitken: Of the toxic chemicals included in the black and red lists, AWE Aldermaston discharges into the environment cadmium and its compounds and mercury and its compounds. The amounts discharged are within the limits prescribed by the relevant regulatory authorities using approved waste disposal routes.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to this answer of 25 June, Official Report, columns 307-8, if he will place copies in the Library of the annual revisions of AWE Aldermaston decommissioning and radioactive waste management policies and programmes of work.

Mr. Aitken: The documents referred to are confidential management publications and cannot therefore be made available to the Library.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether AWE Aldermaston has disposed of any waste thought to contain plutonium contaminated material to (a) the British Nuclear Fuels disposal site at Drigg, (b) the Atomic Energy Authority low-level waste pits at Dounreay or (c) the Atomic Energy Authority intermediate-level waste store at Dounreay.

Mr. Aitken: Under a management certificate of authority, AWE Aldermaston sends plutonium contaminated, low-level waste in the form of solidified sludge to the disposal site at Drigg. This constitutes approximately 20 gms per annum. No plutonium contaminated waste is sent to the other two sites referred to.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much radioactive waste is at present stored at the former royal dockyards HMS Chatham or HMS Gillingham; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: No radioactive waste is currently stored at the former Chatham dockyard.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what research AWE Aldermaston is conducting into (a) the updating of the WE177, Chevaline or Trident and (b) a warhead for a tactical air-to-surface missile.

Mr. Aitken: A continuing research programme is maintained at the Atomic Weapons Establishment which is applied to specific warhead programmes as necessary. As regards a warhead for a tactical air-to-surface missile, I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 12 November 1992, Official Report, col 882.

Hunting–BRAE

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the role and powers of Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution concerning the company Hunting–BRAE in respect of the Atomic Weapons Establishment.

Mr. Aitken: HMIP regulates activities at the four AWE sites—Aldermaston, Burghfield, Foulness and Cardiff—in precisely the same manner as it would for any other premises that are subject to relevant legislation, primarily the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 and the Environmental Protection Act 1990. It has the power of access to all AWE sites and can take action to require compliance. Its powers include the ability to bring prosecutions against those formally authorised to make discharges and disposals; in the case of AWE this would be Hunting–BRAE.

Red Arrows

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what communications he had with the Dutch defence ministry on its request to the Red Arrow display team to curtail their appearance at an air show in Eindhoven on safety grounds; and what Dutch safety guidelines would have been broken if they had participated.

Mr. Hanley: There were no such communications. The invitation for the Red Arrows to display at Eindhoven was accepted as it was understood that the Netherlands authorities were planning to waive some aspects of their regulations on display flying to enable the team to perform their standard display routine. This routine involves a small number of overflights of the spectators at a minimum height of 1,000 feet, but no aerobatic manoeuvres towards or above the crowd. It is understood that it is this aspect of the display routine that does not accord with the Netherlands regulations. The waiver was not granted, so the team withdrew from the event.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his plans in regard to future nuclear tests.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to the response that I gave to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 13 July, Official Report, column 470.

Weather Conditions

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for each region of the United Kingdom the (a) highest, (b) lowest and (c) average annual precipitation for each of the last three years, and also show how many days there was precipitation in each region, on how many days snowfall was recorded and on how many days there was snow cover on arable land and land below the 500 ft contour.

Mr. Aitken: This is a matter delegated to the Meteorological Office under its framework document. I have therefore asked the chief executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Letter from J. C. R. Hunt to Mr William Ross, dated 19 July 1993:

Precipitation

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much precipitation fell in each month of 1985, 1990, 1991 and 1993 to the latest available date; what is the long-term average for each month; and what was the number of days recorded as having no precipitation in each of these months.

Mr. Aitken: This is a matter delegated to the Meteorological Office under its framework document. I have therefore asked the chief executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

RAF Leeming

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his future plans for RAF Leeming in North Yorkshire.

Mr. Hanley: There are three Tornado F3 squadrons, an Air Defence RAF Regiment squadron, an Air Experience Flight and a University Air Squadron at RAF Leeming. As announced, in the 1993 Statement on the Defence Estimates "Defending Our Future (CM 2270) the Tornado F3 force will be reorganised into six squadrons, rather than seven as at present. As a result one of the Tornado F3 squadrons (No. 23 Squadron) at RAF Leeming will disband on 1 April 1994.

There are no current plans for further changes at RAF Leeming.

Jaguar Aircraft

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 14 July, if he will set out the numbers and tasks of ground crew associated with deployment of Jaguars to Italy; where in Italy the Jaguars will be based; at what annual cost; which department will meet the cost; under whose operational command (a) the Jaguars and (b) the RN Sea Harriers will fall; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: 188 ground crew have deployed with the Jaguars to Gioia del Colle. The annual extra costs associated with the deployment of these aircraft are estimated to be £30,000,000, and will be met from defence votes. The Jaguars will be under the operational command of Air Officer Commander-in-Chief Strike Command. The Royal Navy Sea Harriers will be under the operational command of Commander-in-Chief United Kingdom Land Forces. Operational control of both Jaguar and Sea Harrier aircraft involved in close air support operations will be delegated to the appropriate NATO commander.

Army Air Corps

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the additional works required for occupation by the Army Air Corps of RAF Wattisham, showing separately all those costing over £1 million; which RAF facilities will not be used by the AAC, and associated engineering and support units, and why; what additional works are required for the operation or the support of the two search-and-rescue helicopters; what the total cost of the works will be; how much of the construction to date at Dishforth for the Army Air Corps will be required; what has been the cost of works at Dishforth to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: I will write to the hon. Member.

RD57 Site, Rosyth

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are his plans for the future of the RD57 site; what would be the cost of reinstating the site if no alternative use can be made of it; and what would be the cost of finishing work at the site to render it safe and useable for another purpose.

Mr. Aitken: Options for the future of RD57 remain under consideration. We estimate the cost of reinstating the site to be in the order of £15 million; this was taken into account in the comparative assessment of the nuclear facility proposals. The cost of converting the site to another purpose would depend on the purpose.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what volume and tonnage of material has been excavated from the site of the RD57 facility.

Mr. Aitken: The total volume of material excavated from the RD57 site amounted to 185,000 cu m of silt, clay and rock. We do not maintain records of tonnage.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish a summary of the costs incurred on the RD57 facility at Rosyth, showing expenditure in each year since the project started.

Mr. Aitken: This is as follows:

1985-86	0·405
1986-87	2·530
1987-88	3·900
1988-89	4·095
1989-90	15·785
1990-91	17·896
1991-92	25·422
1992-93	27·386
[1]1993-94	0·507
	[2]3·657

[1] To end of June 1993.
[2] Committed but not yet paid.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many cubic metres of concrete have been poured for the development of the RD57 site.

Mr. Aitken: A total of 105,415 cubic metres.

Army Personnel Centre

Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will make an announcement about the proposed new Army personnel centre.

Mr. Hanley: The consultation period on our proposals for the establishment of an integrated Army personnel centre ended only on 9 July. I have seen a number of delegations about our proposals, including one last week, and a large number of representations and comments have been received. I shall be considering all these representations very carefully indeed. This will take a little time, but I hope to make a decision in the first half of September.

OSEX 93

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what live ammunition is being used during the OSEX 93 war games manoeuvres in mid-Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The Offensive Support Exercise took place in mid-Wales from 12 to 16 July. Attacks against inflatable targets were simulated and therefore no ammunition was used. Sorties were conducted at the MOD ranges at Pembrey Sands where 3 kg practice bombs were used and at Sennybridge where 3 kg practice bombs and 30 mm practice ammunition was fired.

Low-flying Aircraft

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many representations he has received regarding low-flying aircraft in the mid-Wales area in each of the last five months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The numbers of representations about low-flying training which my Department has received in each of the last five months from addresses in the county of Powys are as follows:

Month	Number
February	4
March	8
April	9
June	17

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many incidents of low-flying aircraft were recorded by the RAF in the area between Dolgellau and Llandovery in each of the last five months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The United Kingdom low-flying system is divided into 19 low-flying areas for administrative purposes. All military aircraft wishing to fly in the system must first book into each LFA in which they intend to operate. Records are not maintained, however, of the exact route flown.

Nimrod

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the number of Nimrod aircraft (a) in each of the three squadrons at RAF Kinloss, (b) in the Operational Conversion Unit at RAF Kinloss, (c) in 51 Squadron at RAF Wyton and (d) in store or in maintenance facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The Royal Air Force currently has 33 Nimrod aircraft. At RAF Kinloss there are seven Nimrod MR2 aircraft in each of the three squadrons, three aircraft in the operational conversion unit, and two in-use-reserves. At RAF Wyton there are three Nimrod R1 aircraft. Four Nimrod aircraft are in store.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what report he has received of an incident on Sunday 10 July involving British forces serving in Bosnia-Herzegovina being stopped by middle eastern mujaheddin; how many mujaheddin were involved; what action British forces took; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: I have received no report of any such incident.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) pursuant to his answer of 16 July, Official Report, column 720, if he will detail the media reports he is aware of which indicate the presence of (a) Serbian regular forces and (b) Croatian regular forces in Bosnia-Herzegovina;

(2) what reports he has received from British forces serving in Bosnia-Herzegovina of the sighting of (a) Serbian regular forces and (b) Croatian regular forces operating within the terrority of Bosnia-Herzegovina; on how many occasions there have been sightings of (i) Serbian regular forces and (ii) Croatian regular forces; and what estimates of the size of each of these forces have been made;

(3) what reports he has received from British forces in Bosnia-Herzegovina of atrocities having been carried out by Muslim forces within the territory of Bosnia-Herzegovina; and what representations have been made to the Bosnian presidency.

Mr. Hanley: There have been a wide variety of media reports. Information gathered by British and other UNPROFOR troops about force composition is passed on to the United Nations. The United Nations Secretary General forwards situation updates to the Security Council. Example copies are available in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 16 July, Official Report, column 720, what information he has received from UNPROFOR on the presence of (a) Serbian regular forces and (b) Croatian regular forces in Bosnia-Herzegovina; if he will list what those reports have claimed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the number of sites of special scientific interest within his Department's estate which will cease to be operational within the next five years.

Mr. Hanley: It is my Department's policy to seek to maximise the return for the taxpayer when disposing of surplus sites. This is normally best achieved through open market competitive sale once the full planning potential of the property has been explored.

Service Units

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the approximate number of personnel deployed with each of the units listed in Cm. 2270, page 22, table 3.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 16 July 1993]: The exact number of personnel deployed at any time will depend upon the task being performed by, and the readiness state of, the unit in question. Approximate peacetime personnel establishments, which do not include the supporting and logistic units needed to sustain operational deployments, for the force elements listed are as follows:

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Machine Tools

Mr. Henderson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the sales of machine tools in the United Kingdom in (a) 1990 and (b) 1992.

Mr. Sainsbury: Sales of machine tools in the United Kingdom, estimated from CSO figures for sales by United Kingdom manufacturers minus exports plus imports, were (a) £1,304 million in 1990 and (b) £944 million (provisional estimate) in 1992.

However these figures include sales of machine tools, parts and associated equipment. The Machine Tools Technologies Association estimates that sales of machine tools alone were (a) £974 million in 1990 and (b) £675 million in 1992.

Warren Spring Laboratory

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the reasons for the timing of the publication of the fact that he had called for a review of Warren Spring Laboratory in relation to his announcement of his decision to (a) review his Department's laboratories and (b) close Warren Spring Laboratory.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have nothing to add to the earlier announcements which my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade made and to which the hon. Member refers.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the future of competition among environmental technology establishments following the closure of Warren Spring Laboratory.

Mr. McLoughlin: I expect competition amongst the many public and private sector environmental technology establishments to remain vigorous.

Hearing Aid Council

Mr. Hendry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade who may nominate candidates for appointment to the Hearing Aid Council.

Mr. McLoughlin: Anyone may make a nomination who has a genuine involvement whether as a dispenser, as a medical or audiological specialist, or as a hearing aid user. Nominations are also welcome from their representative organisations, relations and advisers.

Those appointed as trade members must be capable of representing the interests of those registered with the Hearing Aid Council and either be so registered or directors or managers of a registered employer. Those appointed as medical/technical members must have specialised medical knowledge of deafness or audiological technical knowledge and must not be eligible for appointment as trade members. Those appointed as consumer members must be capable of representing the interests of persons with impaired hearing and must not be eligible for appointment as trade or medical/technical members.

Nomination forms for the 1994 appointments are available from:

Anne Scrope
Consumer Affairs Division 3b
Department of Trade and Industry
Room 411
10-18 Victoria Street
LONDON SW1H ONN

and should be returned by 26 August 1993.

Accounts Services Agency

Mr. Pickles: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what targets he has set his Department's Accounts Services Agency for 1993-94.

Mr. Sainsbury: I congratulate the chief executive amd his staff on the improvements in performance they have made since the agency was established. It is essential that the agency sustains these improvements and builds on them. I have therefore set the agency the following performance targets for 1993-94:

to recover the full costs from income for customer work:

to fulfil its operational commitments within a net cash requirements in Vote terms of £90,000 or less;

to achieve a 4·8 per cent. unit cost reduction over last year based on a mix of services; to make 97 per cent. of all payments within three working days of receipt of the authorisation to pay; to bank all cheques within 36 hours of receipt by the agency, with at least 75 per cent. of them being banked within eight hours of receipt;

at the end of each month to ensure that all notified transactions are properly recorded on the Departments financial management information system by the start of the fifth working day of the following month; that operating statements are produced and despatched by the start of the sixth working day of the following month.

In addition, I have set the chief executive of the agency the targets of replying within 10 working days to letters from Members of Parliament delegated to him for reply; and producing auditable commercial-style accounts for the agency for 1993-94.

Insolvency Service

Mr. Pickles: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the future of the Insolvency Service.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Insolvency Service became an executive agency of the DTI in March 1990. I am now undertaking a review to consider the scope for improving the way in which the Insolvency Service performs its functions, and achieving better value for money, by making more use of the private sector in the work currently carried out by the Insolvency Service and its official receivers. In particular, the review will look at ways in which official receivers can concentrate more on their important investigatory role by involving the private sector to a larger extent in mechanical processing work in insolvencies.

I will be asking independent consultants to consider: the extent to which official receivers' functions and tasks could be carried out in the private sector; the extent to which official receivers could withdraw from these functions and tasks and the consequences of such withdrawal; whether a market exists to carry out the work and what are the risks; value for money; how the division of work might be organised; and quality control. A number of consultancy firms have been invited to submit proposals. Once the chosen firm has identified the options I shall decide which, if any, to pursue, and will report to the House on my conclusions.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he has received the report of the elections to the statutory committee of the creditors of BCCI; and if he will publish the results.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My officials have received a copy of Mr. Morris's letter of 23 June 1993 which was sent to all creditors of BCCI and which enclosed his report of the creditors meeting held on 27 May together with a report from Electoral Reform Ballot Services on the election of the liquidation committee.

Further publication is a matter for the liquidators.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last met the liquidators of BCCI.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: There have been no meetings between my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade and the joint liquidators of BCCI.

Shipbuilding

Mr. Hutton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his Department's estimate of the total EC expenditure on aid to the European shipbuilding industry under the seventh directive in each of the last three years; and what is the United Kingdom's share of this expenditure.

Mr. Sainsbury: The latest figures available from the European Community on aid to the European shipbuilding industry relate to 1991 and earlier and are incomplete, as shown in the table.

	1989 (Mecu)	1990 (Mecu)	1991 (Mecu)
Total expenditure on aid to european shipbuilding by EC member states	[1]547·7	[2]1,303·3	[3]534·1
United Kingdom expenditure on aid to shipbuilding	42·9	50·5	47·6

[2] Excluding Greece.
[3] Excluding Italy and Greece.

Small Businesses

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what help the Government are giving to small firms to recover debts due to them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government are actively addressing the problem of late payment to small firms. We have initiated a wide range of measures including:

(a) providing financial support for three trade associations to operate pilot prompt payment initiatives;

(b) new Government contracting terms have been introduced requiring companies awarded Government contracts to pay their subcontractors promptly, normally within 30 days;

(c) Government Departments are monitoring the percentage of their bills which are paid within the agreed contract period and we will publish performance;

(d) promoting improvements to court procedures for debt recovery;

(e) in his spring Budget, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, my right hon. Friend the Member for Kingston upon Thames (Mr. Lamont), announced a reduction in the waiting time for VAT bad debt relief; an increase in the threshold for VAT cash accounting and changes to the VAT penalties and surcharge regime;

(f) consulting on proposals to require large companies to state in their reports and accounts how quickly they pay;

(g) distributing the DTI publication: "Making the Cash Flow" which contains advice for small firms on credit management.

Furthermore, my noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Consumer Affairs and Small Firms has given her personal commitment to take up on their behalf complaints small firms have of experiencing late payment by large companies or public bodies.

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what study his Department has made of the principle of statutory right to interest on debts due to small firms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government are very aware of the difficulties faced by small firms who suffer from late payments and has initiated a wide range of measures to help with the problem. My Department has examined information from other countries on the operation of legislation designed to effect prompt payment and keeps in close touch with the view of representative organisations in this country. We remain to be convinced that legislation to introduce a statutory right to interest would be effective in combatting late payment.

We continue to be interested in views on how an effective legislative framework might operate while through action and example working to impress the message of prompt payment to businesses of all sizes.

Patent Office

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his latest estimate of the cost of the consultants' examination of the Patent Office that is now taking place.

Mr. McLoughlin: The consultants' contract for the Patent Office study is commercially confidential. It is not, therefore, appropriate to disclose the estimated cost.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will set out the timescale for the work of the consultants on the Patent Office, including the date when the consultants expect to (a) conclude and (b) publish their report.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 20 July 1993]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 20 July 1993, Official Report, column 136, and the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Norwich, North (Mr. Thompson) on 30 June 1993, Official Report, column 512.

Mr. Paul Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, if he will list those groups and individuals in the Patent Office who were offered assistance from consultancies in the current market testing exercise.

Mr. McLoughlin: Consultancy help was offered to, and accepted by, the in-house reprographics team, which received assistance from a firm of management consultants in formulating its bid.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will set out the arrangements he made for in-house bids for the market testing programme at the Patent Office.

Mr. McLoughlin: The terms of reference of the market test were set out in a notice to all staff on 6 November 1992, following consultation with the local trade unions. This drew specific attention to the opportunity for making in-house bids.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which categories of work at the Patent Office are (a) currently being market tested and (b) being considered for future market testing.

Mr. McLoughlin: The current programme which is nearing completion, having entered the consultation phase, includes reprographics, messenger and post despatch services, file repository, stationery, trade marks data capture and trade marks referencing. Market testing will be applied in due course to other Patent Office work, but no decisions have been taken on the context of next year's programme.

Japanese Companies (Turnover)

Mr. Hunter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, what has been the annual turnover of Japanese companies in the United Kingdom each year since 1983.

Mr. Sainsbury: Estimates of turnover of Japanese manufacturing companies based in the United Kingdom for 1983-90 are shown in the table. No reliable information is available for Japanese companies outside the manufacturing sector.

Total value of sales and work done by Japanese enterprises based in the United Kingdom classified to manufacturing 1983-90

	Value of sales £ million
1983	193·0
1984	321·6
1985	447·8
1986	595·5
1987	1,040·0
1988	1,788·3
1989	2,916·3
1990	4,631·6

Notes:

(i) The table refers to enterprises controlled by companies incorporated in Japan.
(ii) Manufacturing refers to activities in Divisions 2 to 4 of the Standard Industrial Classification.
(iii) 1990 is the most recent published estimate.
(iv) All data are expressed in current prices.

Home Contents Insurance

Mr. Bayley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has as to what proportion of state pensioners in (a) Great Briatin and (b) York have home contents insurance.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Department does not collect data on the take-up of insurance policies. The latest Family Expenditure Survey indicates that 77·3 per cent. of those households in Great Britain whose heads are of pensionable age have household contents insurance. The equivalent figure for Yorkshire and Humberside is 76 per cent. The figure for the city of York cannot be isolated.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he is proposing to hold with foreign customers or Governments regarding the return of waste arising from the lifetime operation of THORP.

Mr. Eggar: The arrangements for the return of waste are primarily for British Nuclear Fuels plc and its customers in accordance with the contracts between them. These are supported by intergovernmental letters exchanged at the appropriate time.

Environmental Technology Centre

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the reasons for preferring the creation of the National Environmental Technology Centre to the relocation of Warren Spring Laboratory to the Welwyn Garden City site acquired in July 1992.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 13 July 1993]: The reasons were given in the reply which my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Blaby (Mr. Robathan) on 10 June, Official Report, columns 303-4. A copy of the PA report has since been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Regional Aid

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many firms that have received regional selective assistance in the northern region in each of the last five years have ceased trading; and how many jobs were lost as a consequence.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 19 July 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 12 July 1993, Official Report, columns 346-47. Figures on firms ceasing to trade and jobs lost are not available. However, the number of firms in the Northern region having received RSA and which are known to have become subject to insolvency proceedings, are given below.

	Number of firms
1988-89	21
1989-90	29
1990-91	23
1991-92	15
1992-93	3

HOME DEPARTMENT

Secure Training Orders

3. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for implementation of the secure training orders proposal.

Mr. Howard: I intend to bring legislative proposals before the House as soon as possible.

Crime

14. Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new initiatives his Department is taking to tackle crime; and if he will make a statement.

21. Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new initiatives he will be taking to tackle crime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We are strengthening the powers of the courts to deal with offenders. We are setting up the National Board for Crime Prevention and expanding the safer cities programme. We shall also be issuing shortly a new good practice guide to help local communities develop their own crime prevention strategies.

Metropolitan Police

15. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans the Government have for changes in the structure and functions of the Metropolitan police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There are no plans for any change in the function of the Metropolitan police. Our proposals for the Metropolitan police are set out in chapter 11 of the White Paper on police reform, published on 28 June.

Remand in Custody

17. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in reducing the time spent on remand in custody awaiting trial.

Mr. Maclean: The average time spent in custody on remand, from the prisoner's first appearance in the magistrates court to his arraignment before the Crown court, was 125 days in 1992. This compares with 119 days in 1991.

Policing Decisions (Devolution)

18. Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he intends to devolve responsibility for policing decisions to local level.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We intend to abolish unnecessary central controls on police manpower and capital expenditure. Stronger local police authorities will set clear local objectives. Chief constables will then be free to decide how to deploy the available resources to meet the policing needs of their area.

Lenient Sentences

16. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received regarding lenient sentences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I receive a number of letters on lenient sentences.

The Attorney-General can now refer lenient sentences to the Court of Appeal and the courts now have powers to impose longer sentences on violent and sexual offenders.

19. Mr. Mark Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the measures allowing an appeal against lenient sentencing; and if he will make a statement.

28. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what view he has formed of the effectiveness of the power of appeal against lenient sentences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The power for the Attorney-General to refer to the Court of Appeal sentences which he considers to be unduly lenient is both important and necessary. The discerning use of this power has repeatedly demonstrated the wisdom of the Government's decision to introduce it.

Independent Criminal Cases Review Authority

20. Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the Independent Criminal Cases Review Authority to be in place; when he expects it to start dealing with cases; and if this will involve existing prisoners, or only newly convicted people.

Mr. Maclean: We are considering urgently and carefully all the recommendations of the Royal Commission on criminal justice, including those relating to appeals and miscarriages of justice; and will decide in due course what action is needed and in what time scale.

Drink-driving

24. Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action his Department is taking to deal with drink-driving.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The enforcement of the law on drinking and driving is an operational matter for individual chief officers of police.

Burglary

25. Mr. John Townend: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what priority he attaches to bringing forward new measures for dealing with burglary.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Chief officers of police attach a high priority to measures aimed at tackling burglary. The Home Office will continue to encourage police forces to develop effective anti-burglary initiatives and will support the police through its crime prevention training, publicity and research programmes.

Police Staff Associations (Elected Officers)

26. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will maintain the present arrangements whereby police officers are regarded as being on duty when attending meetings and conferences connected with their duties as elected officers of police staff associations.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend will consider whether this facility should continue in the light of comments which he receives in response to recommendation 143 of the report of the inquiry into police responsibilities and rewards.

Young Offenders

22. Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the efficacy of current measures to deal with persistent juvenile offenders.

Mr. Maclean: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Ludlow (Mr. Gill) on 24 June, Official Report, column 255.

27. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about measures he is taking to deal with offenders under the age of 18 years.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made to the House by my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Rushcliffe (Mr. Clarke) on 2 March, Official Report, columns 139-50, in which he announced the Government's intention to provide courts with a new sentence, provisionally entitled a secure training order, to assist them in dealing with persistent juvenile offenders. Further measures are under consideration to bring the necessary legislation before the House as soon as possible.

Racist Attacks (London)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the policing of racist attacks in London.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The policing of racial attacks in London is the responsibility of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis, who has made it clear that eliminating racial attacks is one of his priorities. The Government fully support the efforts of the police in London, and throughout the country, to tackle racially motivated crime, and to provide support to the victims of it.

Derek Bentley

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to give a posthumous pardon to Derek Bentley; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend is considering the recent judgment of the divisional court and will announce his conclusions shortly.

Crossbows

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to make it a criminal offence to own a crossbow.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to extend the existing restrictions on the sale and possession of crossbows.

Bail

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of suspects failed to answer (i) police bail, (ii) bail before magistrates courts and (iii) bail to appear in the Crown court in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is published annually in "Criminal statistics, England and Wales", chapter 8. In 1991, 7 per cent. of persons bailed by the police, 7 per cent. of those bailed by magistrates courts and 9 per cent. of those bailed to appear at the Crown court, failed to appear.

Immigration

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received concerning immigration cases from hon. Members since his appointment.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Nearly 1,200 written representations have been received over that period.

Firearms

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will detail the notifiable offences recorded by the police in which firearms were reported to have been used by offence group for the years 1979, 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Maclean: Figures for notifiable offences recorded by the police in which firearms were reported to have been used, by offence group, for the years 1979, 1990 and 1991 are published in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", Table 3.1. Figures for 1992 are not yet available.

Copies of these publications can be found in the Library.

Maritime Detention

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the policy towards the use of maritime detention facilities for category C prisoners; what consideration he has given to the location of such facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Martime detention facilities are one of the options being considered as part of a Prison Service contingency planning exercise. This exercise is intended to identify options for coping with levels of prisoner population that exceed the available prison accommodation. A number of sites with the necessary docking facilities are being considered, but no final decision has been taken on the feasibility of this option.

Security Services

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is now his policy on parliamentary accountability of the security services.

Mr. Howard: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a similar question from him on 24 June, Official Report, column 255.

Raves

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding illegal raves; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Following events last year, in particular at Castlemorton Common, Malvern and Newtown, Powys, we have received many representations about the powers which are available to deal with illegal rave parties on land.

On 31 March, my right hon. and learned Friend the then Home Secretary announced our proposals to give the police new powers to prevent illegal rave parties on land.

Welsh Boundary Commission

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will announce who will be deputy chairman of the Parliamentary Boundary Commission for Wales.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Lord Chancellor has appointed the Hon. Sir Malcolm Pill to serve as deputy chairman of the Parliamentary Boundary Commission for Wales. This appointment is effective until 31 December 1996.

European Constituencies Committees

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will announce the membership of the European parliamentary constituencies committees for England and Wales.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have appointed the following people to serve on the European parliamentary constituencies committees:

ENGLAND

Chairman:
Miss Sheila Cameron, QC

Members:
Mr. David Macklin, CBE
Mr. Michael Lewer, QC

WALES

Chairman:
The Honourable Sir Malcolm Pill

Members:
Mr. Peter Davey, CBE
Mr. Murray McLaggan, JP, DL, MA

The appointments will be effective until February 1994.

Fire Precautions

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps have been taken to implement the recommendation in the Bickerdike Allen report of 1990 that a national network of professional development courses be established in universities and colleges of higher education targeted at the various professionals concerned with fire precautions.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A national core curriculum in fire safety studies by design has been developed by the fire safety studies group which comprises representatives of the concerned professional bodies and Government Departments. The curriculum provides a common body of knowledge from which each profession can take what is needed for its members' development in fire safety studies. The curriculum was formally launched at the Palace of Westminster on 21 June. It has already been adopted as part of the entrance examinations of some of the professional bodies. Courses, up to degree level, based on the curriculum are already running in a number of institutions. These, with others, will form the national network recommended by the Bickerdike Allen report. I have arranged for copies of the national core curriculum in fire safety studies to be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Prison Facilities

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many prisons in England and Wales inmates have not had the opportunity to shower and receive a change of clean kit at least once a week during the last six months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated July 1993.

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of prisons in England and Wales, where in the last six months, inmates have not had the opportunity to shower and receive a change of clean kit, at least once a week.

Standing Orders require that inmates be given the opportunity of a shower or bath at least once a week and that adequate supplies of clean clothing are supplied. In very many cases baths or showers and changes of clothing are available more frequently than once a week. I regret that detailed information on frequency at individual establishments is not currently held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Immigration Quota Vouchers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were waiting for special quota vouchers in (a) India, (b) east Africa and (c) the rest of the world in (i) May 1992 and (ii) December 1992; when those issued with vouchers on those dates had applied; how many vouchers were issued in (1) India, (2) east Africa and (3) the rest of the world in (A) 1992 and (B) the first quarter of 1993; when those applying now can expect to receive vouchers; and how many applicants there were for vouchers in (v) India, (w) east Africa and (x) the rest of the world in (y) 1992 and (z) the first half of 1993.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information which is currently available is given in the tables.

Immigration Offences

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were detained under Immigration Act powers for a period of more than two months on completion of a custodial sentence during 1992.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Thirty-nine people who completed a custodial sentence in 1992 were detained for more than two months under deportation powers. This figure does not include those subject to removal as illegal entrants, in relation to whom the information is not readily available. The same caveat should have applied to the replies given to similar questions from the hon. Member for Edinburgh Central (Mr. Darling) on 14 October 1991, column 21 and 13 July 1992 column 492. I regret that this was not made clear at the time.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the (a) passengers in total and (b) persons treated as illegal entrants who were granted temporary admission/release in 1992 subsequently absconded; and how many (i) later reported voluntarily to the immigration authorities and (ii) were rearrested.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The available information relates to the number of persons who absconded, either from detention or by failing to respond to the terms of temporary admission/release, and is given in the table. The other information requested is not available.

Absconders in 1992

Category of person	Numbers of persons
Passengers[1]	530
Illegal entrants	223

[1] May include some absconders recorded as "illegal entrants"

Hong Kong

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for naturalisation made under the provisions of the British Nationality (Hong Kong) Act 1990 were (a) decided, (b) granted, (c) refused and (d) withdrawn, under each class and category of the scheme, in each quarter since January 1992 and in total throughout the existence of the scheme; and how many of these applications were from (i) heads of households or (ii) family members.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information about family members is not available for refusals or withdrawals of applications. The remaining information requested is shown. The equivalent information I gave last year is answer to a question from the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling) on 13 July 1992, columns 477-80, omitted grants of citizenship to "other teaching personnel" in the period April-June 1992. I regret this omission, which has been corrected in the following tables.

Immigration (DNA Tests)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many DNA tests to prove a family relationship for immigration purposes have been carried out under the Home Office-funded scheme during (a) 1992 and (b) the first quarter of 1993, listed by country of origin; what was the average waiting period for the test and for its results; and in how many of those tests the family relationships were proved to be as claimed by the applicants.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The available information for 1992 and the first quarter 1993 is given in the table.

The average waiting time from the taking of a blood sample to a decision being made on the result of a DNA test is six to eight weeks.

Prison Governors

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what checks are made by his Department to ensure that governor grades in prisons in England and Wales spend time within wings and are regularly available to be seen by inmates.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated July 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about checks made by his Department to ensure that governor grades in prisons in England and Wales spend time within wings and are regularly available to be seen by inmates.

Governor grades are expected to maintain a regular presence on prison wings to provide access for prisoners in the exercise of their management and supervisory role. There is no set period of time during which governors are obliged to be present on the wings, and their attendance will depend upon day to day circumstances and the priorities at the time. In many prisons, though, a governor will be based in an office on each wing and in all prisons a governor grade is available usually on a daily basis, to hear applications from prisoners.

The way in which governors carry out their duties is monitored in a number of ways: their accessibility to prisoners will be one of the many aspects which area managers will seek to cover during their frequent visits to establishments.

Mrs. Bridgit Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) male and (b) female, Metropolitan police officers have suffered (i) violent injury and (ii) death while performing their professional duties, for each year from 1980 to 1992; and how many in each case were stationed in Lewisham.

Mr. Maclean: The information is readily available from 1984 and is contained in the table.

Asylum

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what third countries are expected to participate in meetings of common interest referred to at item 10 of the recent report of the Centre for Information, Discussion and Exchange on Asylum.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No decisions have yet been made on participation by third countries.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library the detailed analysis of the use by member states of terms to express definite concepts of asylum statistics referred to in the recent report of the Centre for Information, Discussion and Exchange on Asylum.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the funding implications for the Government of participation in the Centre for Information, Discussion and Exchange on Asylum.

Mr. Charles Wardle: None, apart from travelling and subsistence allowances.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library the documents on compilation of texts on European asylum practice, the schedule for the purpose of an improved oral exchange of data at the Centre for Information, Discussion and Exchange on Asylum meetings, the principles for the dissemination of information from CIREA, and reports on the context of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees database which are referred to in the recent report of the Centre for Information, Discussion and Exchange on Asylum.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I am placing in the Library copies of the compilation of texts on European asylum practice and the schedule for the purpose of an improved oral exchange of data. The other material requested has not been made public.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library all joint reports from the local diplomatic representations of the European countries referred to at item 6 of the recent report of the Centre for Information, Discussion and Exchange on Asylum.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many passengers seeking political asylum in (a) 1992 and (b) 1993 to the nearest available date were granted temporary admission;

(2) if he will provide a breakdown by nationality of the number of people seeking political asylum who were detained under Immigration Act powers in 1992 and 1993 to the latest convenient date in (a) prison department establishments and (b) immigration detention accommodation, for (i) under a week, (ii) one to four weeks, (iii) one month to six months, (iv) six months to a year and (v) over a year.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested on temporary admission is not available centrally.

The information on detention is not available in the form requested, but the tables provide relevant information on people seeking asylum who, on 19 July 1993, had been detained for seven days or more.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how the Centre for Information, Discussion and Exchange on Asylum is funded.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There is no specific funding for CIREA. Its activities are supported by a small number of officials in the General Secretariat of the Council of the European Communities, who also have other duties, and accommodation is provided within the offices of the Council.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefit Claimants (Savings)

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what interest rate is assumed by his Department when calculating income from claimants's for social security benefits.

Mr. Burt: None. In all the income-related benefits, capital up to £3,000 is ignored. Deductions from benefit of £1 a week are made for each £250, or part of £250, of capital between £3,000 and the upper capital limit for the particular benefit. This formula does not imply any particular rate of investment. It is designed to ensure that help is targeted on those who need it most, while not denying benefit to those with only a moderate amount of capital. The rules are kept under review, but we have no plans for change.

Dementia

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to secure statutory protection of pension rights for those developing dementia while at work.

Mr. Hague: National insurance contribution credits are awarded to those submitting evidence of incapacity to safeguard their entitlement to the basic state pension. Additionally, members of occupational pension schemes who leave with at least two years pensionable service already benefit from the statutory right to a preserved pension. Those with less than two years pensionable service in a scheme which is contracted out of the state earnings-related pension scheme can be reinstated in SERPS for that period. We have no plans to change these arrangements.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many carers have been in receipt of invalid care allowance in Wales in each year since 1986; and what percentage of total carers within Wales have been successful claimants in each year.

Mr. Scott: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Social Fund (Hospital Visit Grants)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications have been made by parents for social fund grants towards the cost of visiting children in hospital to each social fund office in Wales in the latest year for which information is available; how many grants and loans were made; and what was the average level of grants and loans.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are in receipt of invalidity allowance in the Seaham and Peterlee areas; and what were the numbers of recipients in 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Boarder's Premium

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to reintroduce boarder's premium for people currently housed in bed-and-breakfast accommodation.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 21 July at col. 205.

Lone Parents

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lone parents there are in Darlington; and how many and what proportion of income support claimants are lone parents in Darlington.

Mr. Burt: A provisional estimate of the number of lone parent families in the local government district of Darlington in 1991 is 3000.[1]

Data on the number of lone parent families in receipt of income support in individual locations are not available. However, the total number of lone parents on income support in Great Britain in 1992 was 985,000[2], representing 19 per cent. of all income support claimants.

The definition of lone parents used excludes the temporarily separated.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many and what percentage of single parents had social security payments as their main source of income in (a) 1979 and (b) 1991 in (i) Strathclyde and (ii) Scotland as a whole.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Dr. Norman Godman, dated 21 July 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many and what percentage of single parents had social security payments as their main source of income in (a) 1979 and (b) 1991 in (i) Strathclyde and (ii) Scotland as a whole.

The complete range of information requested is not available as statistics that reflect the number of single parents in receipt of each Social Security benefit are not routinely collected. It is also likely that many of the relevant records will have been routinely destroyed since 1979.

Below I have given the number of single parents in Scotland who were in receipt of Supplementary Benefit in 1979 and Income Support in 1991.

This information is obtained from an annual statistical sampling exercise. It is not possible to provide figures separately for Strathclyde.

(1) Single parents in Scotland in receipt of Supplementary Benefit at November 1979—34,000

(2) Single parents in Scotland in receipt of Income Support at May 1991—102,000

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is (a) the number of lone parents, (b) the number of income support claimants who are lone parents and (c) the proportion of income support claimants who are lone parents in each region.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is in the table.

	England	Scotland	Wales	Great Britain

(b) Total number of lone parents on income support, 1992	823	106	57	985
(c) Proportion of IS claimants who are Lone Parents per cent. 1992	19	20	20	19

Note: Totals may not sum due to rounding.

(b) and (c) 1992 Income Support Annual Statistical Enquiry. The definition of lone parents used excludes the temporarily separated.

Benefits

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the regional expenditure on (a) retirement pensions, (b) sickness and invalidity benefits, (c) housing benefits, (d) unemployment benefit, (e) family credit, (f) income support, (g) social fund and (h) child benefit as (i) a total and (ii) per head for each of the last five years for which figures are avaialble.

Mr. Scott: Information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the value of unclaimed (a) income support, (b) housing benefit, (c) family credit and (d) invalidity benefit, giving the estimated number of non-claimants involved; and the proportion of each benefit entitlement unclaimed, for each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Burt: Estimates of the take-up of income support, family credit and the new unified housing benefit were published in "Income Related Benefit Estimates of Take-up in 1989" in January this year. Take-up estimates for the income-related benefits that were available before the 1988 benefit reforms are for 1985 and 1987 and are provided in Social Security Statistics 1990 (Table 48) and Social Security Statistics 1991 (Table H.5) respectively. Copies of these publications are in the Library.

Information for invalidity benefit is not available.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what effect steepening the housing benefit taper from 65 per cent. to 80 per cent. would have on the proportion of income retained per £1 a week increase in gross earnings for (a) a lone parent earning £136 per week, (b) a single adult earning £132 per week and (c) a two adult family earning £196 per week, paying an average weekly rent of £48 per week.

Mr. Burt: Such an increase would have the effect of increasing the proportion of each £1 a week increase in gross earnings retained from 23p to 66p—that is, £1 less tax and national insurance contributions—in cases (b) and (c) but would take people in these circumstances out of housing benefit entitlement. For case (a) housing benefit entitlement would be retained and the proportion of income retained per £1 a week increase in gross earnings would reduce from 7p to 4p.

Note: Figures provided from tax benefit model 1993. The benefit rates are as at April 1993. Assumptions are for (a) lone parent with one child; (b) single adult over age 25; (c) two adult family with two children aged 4 and 6.

Bus Passes

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if his Department has now concluded discussions with Walsall council over the bus pass concession for blind people in receipt of the disability living allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: On 8 July, the council wrote to the Department with its further observations. The Department is considering the points made and remains in discussion with the council.

Mortgage Costs

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures are being taken against people in Wales receiving benefit to cover their mortgage costs who failed to inform his Department when their payments dropped; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The administration of social security is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Rod Richards, dated 21 July 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security, asking what measures are being taken against people in Wales receiving benefit to cover their mortgage costs who failed to inform his Department when their payments dropped; and if he will make a statement.

I acknowledge that administrative difficulties have arisen for some customers who have chosen to obtain a mortgage which is reviewed annually. Such 'annual review' mortgages are arranged by the mortgage lender so that, although the interest being charged to the borrower's account may change in the course of the year, the repayments that the borrower is required to make are not adjusted to reflect this until the end of the lender's accounting year.

Although Income Support (IS) may include an amount to cover mortgage interest payments, it is calculated with reference to the rate of mortgage interest being charged to the customer's loan account.

Since mortgage interest payments on 'annual review' mortgages are not calculated on this basis there can, in certain circumstances, be a difference between the amount of IS paid compared with what the lender would expect to receive under the annual review arrangement. The Benefits Agency has held meeting with the Council of Mortgage Lenders about this difficulty. In the meantime, mortgage lenders will normally look sympathetically at requests from customers to be taken off the annual review arrangement. My advice to customers who find themselves in difficulty would be to immediately contact their mortgage lender to discuss the situation.

However, it remains the responsibility of the customer to inform the Benefits Agency of any changes in their circumstances. This includes any change in the rate of interest charged to their mortgage account.

A customer residing in any part of Great Britain, who fails to inform the Department of a decrease in their rate of mortgage interest can be asked to repay the IS overpaid.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Knutsford Crown Court

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will give Mr. Ray Veal the opportunity to tender for the cleaning and caretaking facilities at Knutsford Crown court; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: It is not the policy of the Lord Chancellor's Department to employ caretakers for court buildings. In accordance with Government policy of securing value for money, cleaning contracts are awarded by competitive tender and the contract for Knutsford has already been let.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement concerning the compulsory redundancy of Mr. Ray Veal, the court keeper at Knutsford Crown court.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Mr. Ray Veal is an employee of Cheshire county council and his redundancy is a direct result of the county council's decision to sell Sessions house to the Lord Chancellor's Department. Negotiations with Cheshire county council for the freehold purchase of Sessions house proceeded on the basis of full vacant possession and it was clearly understood that Cheshire county council would identify suitable alternative accommodation for Mr. and Mrs. Veal. Further, the Lord Chancellor's Department made it clear to Cheshire county council that it would not be able to use the services of Mr. Veal as a caretaker. However, in an attempt to be helpful to both the county council and Mr. and Mrs. Veal, the Government property lawyers have been instructed to investigate and conclude an appropriate occupancy agreement to enable Mr. and Mrs. Veal to remain in their present accommodation.

Legal Aid

Mr. Alton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many applications for legal aid have been made by solicitors acting on behalf of clients suffering from tranquilliser addiction and seeking to sue drug companies in the past 10 years; how much money has been paid to solicitors' firms over that period; how many such cases have been concluded in a court of law; and how many legal aid certificates have been issued, cases begun and legal aid subsequently withdrawn.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The only significant tranquilliser action to have received funding from the Legal Aid Board is the current Benzodiazepine action, for which 17,000 legal aid applications were made. These applications cover actions against the companies manufacturing the drugs together with the authorities prescribing them. The generic legal aid expenditure on all the Benzodiazepine drugs in the litigation amounts to approximately £3 million, though further, as yet unquantified, costs have also been incurred. In view of the numbers of individual cases involved, these costs may be considerable. None of the Benzodiazepine cases has yet been concluded. A total of 13,168 legal aid certificates were issued. The position on these is constantly changing, but at present more than 7,000 certificates have been discharged and several hundred are awaiting decisions on appeal. There have also been approximately 20 tranquilliser cases where legal aid was granted, but which were not part of the Benzodiazepine litigation. These have all been discharged and none of the cases was concluded in court.

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Meacher: asked the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list each of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Lord Chancellor's Department; to whom these bodies are responsible; whether the public bodies or their members in each case are subject to (a) surcharge, (b) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open Government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charters; and whether the chairpersons and members of the boards of each of these bodies are required to declare an interest.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Of the executive NDPBs listed in Public Bodies 1992, the Authorised Conveyancing Practitioners Board, which is responsible to the Lord Chancellor, was established to develop competition in the provision of conveyancing services and to supervise the provision of those services by authorised practitioners. In response to a parliamentary question on 13 March the Lord Chancellor announced that, due to a lack of demand to become authorised practitioners, he was postponing implementation of those provisions of the 1990 Act necessary to allow the board to begin the process of authorisation.

Answers to specific questions:

(a) No
(b) Yes
(c) Yes
(d) Not applicable
(e) No. The decision to postpone the authorised practitioner scheme was taken before the board's performance indicators had been finalised.
(f) Yes. The chairman and the members of the board would be required to declare an interest.

Legal Aid Board

The responses for the Legal Aid Board, which is responsible to the Lord Chancellor are as follows:

(a) No
(b) Yes
(c) Yes
(d) Not applicable
(e) Yes
(f) Yes. The board is shortly to publish a statement of its charter standards.

Before appointing a person to be a member of the board, the Lord Chancellor satisfies himself that the individual's financial and other interests will not prejudice his or her functions as a member of the board. The Lord Chancellor also from time to time satisfies himself as to the members continuing interests. In addition, a member must declare an interest at any time throughout their tenure when a conflict of interest arises. The provisions governing members' interests are covered by schedule 1 of the Legal Aid Act 1988.

TRANSPORT

Road and Railway Schemes

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average percentage difference in time taken for (a) roads and (b) railways between the initial consultative plan and the finally approved scheme.

Mr. Freeman: Road schemes completed in 1992-93 took on average 13·9 years to complete. We are currently looking at ways to reduce this figure and my right hon. Friend hopes to make an announcement shortly.

Applications for orders for new rail schemes are now governed by the Transport and Works Act, which came into force on 1 January 1993. We have not yet received any applications regarding railway schemes under the provisions of this Act; it is not therefore possible to make comparisons with road schemes. The time scale between receipt of draft orders and approval would depend on the size of the scheme and the degree of controversy surrounding it.

Computer Consultancies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all the computer consultancies employed by his Department and agencies since November 1991, the tasks for which they were engaged, and the total cost to his Department.

Mr. Norris: Since November 1991, the Department of Transport and its agencies have engaged 55 computer consultancy companies. The tasks on which they were employed range from strategic analysis to systems review. The cost of the commissions is approaching £7 million.

A550

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the M53/M56 alternative to the A550 improvement scheme was evaluated before or after the public consultation exercise; and if he will publish the results of the evaluation, including projected traffic flows.

Mr. Key: We do not believe that a route via the M53 and M56 presents a viable alternative. Although the question of this alternative was considered carefully prior to the preferred route announcement, no detailed evaluation is available.

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment will be made of the traffic generated as a result of stages 1 and 2 of the A550 improvement scheme in considering whether to proceed with stage 3.

Mr. Key: This scheme is now being progressed in two stages. The technical appraisal for stage 2 (Ledsham to the M53) makes allowance for any additional traffic using the route as a result of the stage 1 improvement to the south.

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment was made of the extent to which road usage on the Friday afternoon of a bank holiday weekend represented typical road usage for the purposes of photographs included in consultation on the A550 road improvement scheme.

Mr. Key: The photograph was used as an illustration of congestion that can occur. The A550 improvements have been evaluated against forecast annual average daily traffic flows in the design year 2012.

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for what reason a question asking for views on whether a new road was required did not form part of the public consultation for the A550 improvement scheme.

Mr. Key: To gauge the level of public support for a major improvement.

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide full details of the rail schemes assessed as an alternative to the A550 improvement scheme, including the routes assessed, their cost, and the projected changes in rail traffic associated with each alternative.

Mr. Freeman: No rail schemes have been assessed as possible alternatives to the A550 improvement scheme. Rail would not be a practicable option given the alignment of existing track in the area, which does not run in parallel with the A550 to Ledsham and beyond.

Road Fuel Duties

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what reduction in road traffic volumes is expected to result from the increase in road fuel duties announced on 16 March.

Mr. Key: The increase in road fuel duties announced on 16 March is aimed at contributing toward the Government's commitment to return overall CO_2 emissions from the United Kingdom in the year 2000 to the level recorded in 1990. By 2000, the increase in fuel duties is expected to have reduced road transport emissions of CO_2 by about 1.5 million tonnes of carbon (mtC), roughly one-seventh of the required savings. That increase in duties will have a greater effect on fuel consumption (and thus CO_2) than on traffic levels. This is because the reduction in traffic is just one of the effects likely to follow from higher fuel prices. We would also expect a variety of improvements in fuel economy to come about—for example, improved driver technique, changes in speed, choice of smaller cars and improvements in vehicle design. Under the minimum duty increases announced, the level of traffic (all motor vehicles) in 2000 would be about 500 bn vehicle km instead of the 510 bn vehicle km forecast using the mid-point of the National Road Traffic Forecasts—a 2 per cent. reduction.

Public Transport

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 24 May, Official Report, column 418, how many passenger miles are expected to transfer from private car to public transport as a result of the public transport initiatives described.

Mr. Freeman: It is not possible to estimate the number of passenger miles likely to transfer from private car to public transport. In the case of buses, much of the success of the measures depends on action being taken by local authorities.

Diversions

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average diversion in road miles over original routes provided by trunk road bypasses of motorway or express road standard over the past five years and planned for the next five years.

Mr. Key: This information is not readily available, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

M53

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the Hooton spur of the M53, north of junction 5, was built as part of a road scheme linking the M53 to a projected Dee barrage.

Mr. Key: The spur at junction 5 of the M53 was constructed in the 1970s for a possible link with the M56 to the west of Ellesmere Port.

Wirral-North Wales Corridor

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish details of the public transport schemes currently being assessed for the Wirral-North Wales corridor as part of the public transport initiatives contained in his answer of 24 May, Official Report, column 418.

Mr. Freeman: Improvements to public transport will in many cases be the responsibility of the operators concerned; but it is open to local authorities to bring forward proposals for public transport improvements in their area. The Government can assist by making resources available to local authorities where appropriate. For example, we have made £6·4 million available to Merseyside PTA and Cheshire county council for railway electrification between Hooton, Chester and Ellesmere Port; £2·2 million to Merseyside PTA in 1993-94 for city challenge schemes some of which are in Wirral; and £300,000 to Wirral borough council in 1993-94 for bus priority measures. Local authorities have been invited to put forward further proposals in their transport policies and programmes.

Road Accidents

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to publish details of the highway engineering measures his Department is taking to achieve the trunk road share of the national target of reducing road accident casualties by one third by the year 2000.

Mr. Key: I am arranging for copies of the departmental trunk road safety plan to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament, along with copies of the regional safety plans that are separately produced in the Department's regional offices.

These plans detail the many actions and resources the Department is putting into highway engineering measures to reduce accident casualties on trunk roads. I am pleased to say that these measures are reducing deaths and injuries and are working towards meeting our share of the national target.

Amesbury-Berwick Down Improvements

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received objecting to (a) the yellow route and (b) the grey route for the A303 Amesbury to Berwick Down improvement scheme.

Mr. Norris: I have received various representations supportng or opposing the yellow route and grey route options for this improvement scheme near Stonehenge. We are now considering responses to the recent public consultation.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what would be the cost of putting the yellow route for the A303 Amesbury to Berwick Down improvement scheme in a cutting rather than a tunnel.

Mr. Norris: The Department did not offer at the recent public consultation an option for a scheme in cutting along the line of the present A303 as we considered such an option to be unacceptable environmentally, given the importance of Stonehenge. No estimate of cost is available, comparable with those of options offered.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what response he is giving to the National Trust's request for more information on alternative routes for the A303 Amesbury to Berwick Down improvement scheme; and if he will make a statement about the effect of his plans of the inalienability of National Trust land involved.

Mr. Norris: The Department is seeking clarification of what further information the National Trust requires. One main purpose of both the Department's consultation options near Stonehenge is to improve conditions for Stonehenge and its surrounding monuments. The tenure of National Trust land and the terms on which it might be made available are matters for the National Trust.

Criminal Offences

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what criminal offences he has introduced in the last five years under delegated legislation.

Mr. Norris: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Jubilee Line Extension

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total expenditure incurred on the Jubilee line extension project to date; what obstacles now remain before the principal construction works can be started; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Around £180 million. Leaving aside the exit from administration of the Olympia and York Company, before we can give authorisation for construction work to begin the precise terms of the funding agreement between London Underground Limited and London Transport and the parties involved with the financing of Canary wharf must be satisfactorily settled.

Aircraft Ventilation

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what discussions he has held with United Kingdom airline operators about the quality of air in ventilation systems during flights;

(2) what discussions he has held with the Civil Aviation Authority about the quality of cabin air on board British airlines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The European joint aviation authorities' airworthiness standards include requirements for minimum fresh air ventilation flows expressed in terms of fresh air quantity per minute per person. These minimum flows must be provided in the event of a failure in the air supply system; normal flow rates would be appreciably higher. The Civil Aviation Authority sees no reason to review these standards.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the advice he has received from the merchant banker retained by his Department about finance for the channel tunnel rail link.

Mr. Freeman: The independent review of Union Railways' work on the rail link was published in March 1993. We shall make an announcement in due course on the Government's conclusion following the consultation on private sector involvement, taking into account the advice provided by Samuel Montagu.

DVOIT Swansea

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for representatives of the work force of DVOIT Swansea to meet each of the five bidders in the privatisation process before a final choice has been made by his Department.

Mr. Key: Representatives of the DVOIT staff have been offered the opportunity of meeting the prospective purchasers of the agency once a shortlist has been selected. This stage is likely to be reached in the second half of August.

Motor Vehicle Licensing Applications

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what considerations govern the number of sub-post offices permitted to conduct motor vehicle licensing applications.

Mr. Key: The aim is to provide an across-the-counter service within reasonable travelling distance for motorists with an option to relicense by post if this is more convenient.

Vehicle licences are issued by 4,000 of the 20,000 post offices in Great Britain. For this service the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency (DVLA)—effectively the taxpayer—pays a substantial sum of money to Post Office Counters Ltd. (POCL). Any increase in the number of licence-issuing post offices would increase the cost of collection without increasing the overall sum paid into the Exchequer.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigration Offences

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were received into prison department establishments under Immigration Act powers during (a) 1992 and (b) 1993 to the latest convenient date, by individual prison establishment; what was the average daily population of persons so detained in each of those years; what was the average length of time spent in detention by persons so detained in each of those years; and whether he will give a breakdown by nationality of persons so detained for each of those years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of detainees received into Prison Service establishments in England and Wales under the Immigration Act 1971 is given by establishment of initial reception in table 1 for the first half of 1992. Information for receptions for the second half of 1992 and for 1993 is not yet available.

The average population in 1992, including persons originally received for a criminal offence, was 227. The average for January to May in 1993 is 382. A breakdown of the prison population by nationality is given for June 1992 and May 1993 in table 2.

The average period of detention for detainees released in the first half of 1992 is provisionally estimated as nearly 12 weeks. No later information for discharges is yet available.

Doctors (Work Permits)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many overseas doctors have been issued with notices to leave the country; how many of them are waiting for their appeals to be heard; and what are the reasons for asking them to leave.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not available.

Civil Defence Grant Aid

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his Department has any plans to relax the current rules concerning the effect on local authorities' civil defence grant aid allocations of authorities' success in obtaining income from emergency planning activities.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Officials are considering ways in which local authorities can retain any such income obtained and a further announcement will be made shortly.

Probation and Bail Hostels

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list (a) the bail hostels and (b) the combined probation and bail hostels in England and Wales at present; how many places there are in each hostel; and how many additional places the Government aims to provide (i) in each of these hostels and (ii) elsewhere by 1995.

Mr. Maclean: There are currently 30 approved bail hostels in England and Wales, as follows:

The approved hostel expansion programme aims to provide 1,365 additional places between April 1988 and March 1996. Of these, 914 are already on stream and are included in the tables. The remaining places have been provisionally allocated, but until the appropriate properties or sites are identified the precise numbers cannot be determined.

Sheehy Report

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many copies of the executive summary of the Sheehy report on police responsibilities and rewards have been produced; to whom they have been circulated; and at what total cost.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A total of 170,000 copies of the executive summary of the Sheehy report on police responsibilities and rewards were produced. A copy was circulated by the inquiry to every police officer in England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland; to the clerk to the police authority for each force in the United Kingdom; and to the organisations and individuals who gave oral evidence to the inquiry. The cost of production and distribution was £25,965.

Youth Organisations

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will institute an independent evaluation into the performance of the Weston Spirit, Drive for Youth, Fairbridge and other similar charitable organisations specialising in diverting young people from crime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A number of local diversionary projects run by charitable organisations, including Fairbridge, receive Home Office funding. Those projects are therefore subject to monitoring and evaluation.

Deportees

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women have been deported from the United Kingdom in each of the last three years.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 5 July 1993]: The numbers of those deported from the United Kingdom are as follows:

	1990	1991	1992
Male	1,693	1,968	2,008
Female	470	601	568

The figures include those who made a supervised or voluntary departure having been served with a notice of the intention to deport them, as well as those who were the subject of a deportation order.

EMPLOYMENT

Disability

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for employment what assessment he has made of the net Exchequer flowback of the personal reader service.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The most recent assessment of net Exchequer costs for the personal reader service was published in the consultative document "Evaluation of Special Schemes for People with Disabilities: Summary Paper" in November 1990. The figures are shown in the following table:

	Assessment
Gross costs (1988-89) (£000s)	387
Number helped (1988-89)	472
Gross cost per person helped (£s)	820
Estimated range of costs to Exchequer (£000s)	370-510
Estimated range of net costs per person helped (£s)	700-1,000

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the percentage level of employment of (a) blind people and (b) all disabled people.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Labour Force Survey (LFS) asks people of working age if they currently have any health problem or disability which limits the kind of paid work they can do. Estimates based on answers to this question will include people with short-term health problems and disabilities as well as those registered as disabled.

LFS estimates for winter 1992-93, not seasonally adjusted, show that in Great Britain 38·2 per cent. of working age people with such health problems and disabilities were in employment. Of those who reported that their main health problem was with difficulty in seeing, 45·2 per cent. were in employment.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the extent to which employers take account of the cost of special equipment in deciding whether to employ (a) blind workers or (b) people with other disabilities.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: An assessment of the extent to which employers take account of the cost of special equipment was published in the consultative document "Evaluation of Special Schemes for people with disabilities: Summary Paper", in November 1990. The paper provided details of employer responses to a question which asked whether they would have taken or kept their disabled employees on, without help from the special schemes for people with disabilities. The question was asked in relation to all disabled people, regardless of disability although one third were classified as totally blind. The following table shows employer responses with reference to the special aids to employment scheme:

'Would you have taken/kept him/her on without help from the scheme?'

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average cost of equipment given under the special aids to employment schemes (a) for all recipients and (b) for blind workers.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The average cost of equipment supplied under the special aids to employment scheme is (a) £906 for all recipients and (b) £1,373 for blind workers.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has for the personal reader service scheme.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The assistance currently provided by the personal reader service will continue to be available under access to work from April 1994, and will be extended to include support beyond reading.

Employment Agency

Mr. Roger Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the main results of the work of the employment service as a next steps agency in 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I am pleased to announce that the Employment Service achieved excellent results in 1992-93. It placed over 1·42 million unemployed people into jobs, of whom 24 per cent. had been out of work for six months or more. It also exceeded its targets for paying benefit accurately and promptly to those entitled to it. The Chief Executive of the Employment Service has provided my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State with the annual report and accounts for 1992-93. Copies have been placed in the Library today.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Football

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what visits have been made by Ministers in his Department since April 1992 to (i) Premier League football grounds and (ii) Football League grounds.

Mr. Brooke: Ministers have made official visits to one Premier League and two Football League grounds since April 1992.

Angling

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heriage what grants from public funds have been made to the sport of angling since April 1991.

Mr. Brooke: Most of my Department's funding for sport is made through the Sports Council. In 1991-92 it paid grant of £71,749 to angling bodies, including £20,660 to the National Angling Council which was disbanded at the end of that year. In 1992-93 grant paid by the Sports Council to angling's remaining governing bodies was £46,800.

PRIME MINISTER

Foreign Heads of State (Visits)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Prime Minster whether the itinerary of a foreign head of state on an official visit to the United Kingdom is set by Her Majesty's Government.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 13 July 1993]: For an official visit to Britain by a foreign head of state the itinerary is agreed between the British Government and the visitor.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Tourism

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much his Department invested in marketing and promoting Northern Ireland as a tourist destination during 1991 and 1992; how much his Department intends to have spent on marketing and promotion by the end of the current financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Funded by the Government, the Northern Ireland tourist board has spent the following amounts (excluding salary and wages costs) on the marketing and promotion of Northern Ireland as a tourist destination:

1990-91	2,797
1991-92	1,821
1992-93	3,515
1993-94	[1]3,410

[1] Budget.

Increased Government funding for tourism has enabled the tourist board to run a major television campaign in parts of Great Britain and the Republic of Ireland in addition to its normal marketing activities.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many visitors to Northern Ireland in 1992 stated holiday as their main reason for visiting; and what proportion of the total number of visitors that represented during the year.

Mr. Atkins: In 1992, 247,200 pure holiday visitors came to Northern Ireland. This represents 20 per cent. of the total visitors.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which of the target numbers set out in the corporate plan 1992-95 by the Northern Ireland tourist board were achieved in 1992 in respect of (a) visits to friends and relatives, (b) holidays and (c) businesses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The number of business visitors to Northern Ireland in 1992 achieved and significantly exceeded the target, with 380,000 visitors as against a target of 336,000. In a difficult year for international tourism and despite achieving a 6 per cent overall increase in visitors, which produced the fourth successive record year for Northern Ireland tourism, the other two targets were not reached.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of tourists visiting Northern Ireland in 1992 also visited the Republic as a component part of their trip; what proportion of those were from (a) EC countries, (b) the United States of America and (c) elsewhere; and what was the average length of stay in both the north and the Republic.

Mr. Atkins: An estimated 21 per cent. of the visitors to Northern Ireland in 1992 also visited the Republic of Ireland. The form of the tourist data collected is such that the information requested about origin and length of stay is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total expenditure by Northern Ireland residents on (a) leisure day trips and (b) domestic vacations during 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The total expenditure by Northern Ireland residents on domestic vacations in 1992 was £44·63 million. Expenditure on leisure day trips is not collected on a regular basis although experimental surveys are being pursued to assess methodology of collection and the value of such data.

Strategic Planning Unit

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what work is carried out by the strategic planning unit in the Department of Economic Development.

Mr. Atkins: The unit, which includes the Department's economists and statisticians, has responsibilities which include the provision of strategic advice on all aspects of economic development policy, policy evaluation, economic research and the collation and interpretation of statistics.

EDUCATION

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Boswell: The Government continue to place a high priority on helping businesses, through improvements to the business climate, through deregulation and through specific programmes of support and assistance.

Measures operated by the Department to assist small business include encouragement of small firms to tender for its contracts; each contract also includes a requirement to ensure sub-contractors are paid promptly.

The Department monitors both the number and value of its contracts let to small firms. In the first four months of 1993-94, 43 per cent. of contracts were placed with such firms (28 per cent. by value); the corresponding figures for the previous 12 months are 39 per cent. and 29 per cent.

Open University (Tuition Fees)

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many students studying with the Open University have had their tuition fees grant-aided by North Yorkshire county council in each of the last five years.

Mr. Boswell: This information is not collected centrally. Under the Education Act 1962, it is entirely for local education authorities to determine how much to spend on discretionary awards and which students to support.

Elton Report

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement outlining the progress made to date by his Department on implementing the recommendations of the Elton report.

Mr. Forth: The report of the committee of inquiry into discipline in schools chaired by Lord Elton was published in March 1989 and copies were sent by the Department to all schools and local education authorities in England. The report contained recommendations not only to the Government, but also to local education authorities, governing bodies, head teachers, teacher training institutions and other bodies. For its part, the Department has:

supported through education support grants (ESG) 24 LEA projects designed to improve support services for the most difficult pupils (expenditure of £7·3 million over a three year period ending March 1993); supported through ESG 31 projects designed to improve school attendance (£7·4 million over a three-year period ending March 1993). Similar projects to a value of some £9·6 million are being supported in 71 LEAs under the grants for education support and training (GEST) scheme 1993-94; monitored permanent exclusions at maintained schools over a two-year period, starting with summer term 1990, under the national exclusions reporting system (NERS). The key findings from the two-year exercise were published on 23 April 1993; supported research at Sheffield university designed to identify good practice in relation to discipline in inner-city schools and further work on the evaluation of intervention strategies used to combat bullying; required that all initial teacher training courses should include separate, compulsory elements of practical training in how to manage pupil behaviour, and that these skills should be a key factor in assessing a student's performance and competence to teach.

Youth Services

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to impose a statutory obligation on local authorities to develop youth services.

Mr. Boswell: Local education authorities already have a duty under section 41 of the Education Act 1944 as substituted by section 11 of the Further and Higher Education Act 1992 to secure provision for further education. Further education is defined as including vocational training, social physical and recreational training and organised leisure time occupation. Section 53 of the 1944 Act also provides that the facilities provided by an LEA for primary, secondary and further education must include adequate faclities for recreation, social and physical training.

These provisions cover the youth service and it is for individual authorities to decide how they fulfil their duty.

Pupil Exclusions

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish figures showing the number of pupil exclusions in (a) the primary sector and (b) the secondary sector within each local education authority in England in each year since 1987; and what has been the percentage of excluded pupils within the general school population in each local authority area in each year.

Mr. Forth: Information on fixed term and indefinite exclusions has not been collected centrally. Information on permanent exclusions from maintained schools in England was collected by the Department over a two year period, starting with summer term 1990, under the national exclusions reporting system (NERS). The results of the survey were published on 23 April 1993 and showed that a total of 6,743 permanent exclusions had been reported with 2,910 in year one and 3,833 in year two. Exclusions in the primary phase accounted for 13 per cent. of the total in year one and 14 per cent. in year two. The information was gathered for purposes of national aggregation and it is not possible to provide a breakdown of the figures by area because of assurances given as to confidentiality.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many ballots in England on grant-maintained status have resulted in participation rates (a) above 79 per cent., (b) between 70 and 79 per cent., (c) between 60 and 69 per cent., (d) between 50 and 59 per cent. and (e) below 50 per cent.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is as follows, correct as of 21 July.

Participation rates	Number of ballots
80 per cent. or over	126
70 per cent. to less than 80 per cent.	294
60 per cent. to less than 70 per cent.	456

Participation rates	Number of ballots
50 per cent. to less than 60 per cent.	332
Less than 50 per cent.	33

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 6 November 1992, Official Report, column 478, how many (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in each local education authority in England are or have been eligible to apply for grant-maintained status; how many in each case have held ballots under section 61 of the Education Act 1988; how many ballots in each case resulted in votes to seek grant-maintained status, and how many of these have been subject to section 12 or 13 notices; and how many ballots in each case resulted in votes against seeking grant-maintained status.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is listed in the table. Column 2 gives the total number of maintained schools in each LEA in January 1992 (other than special schools and nurseries). Column 5 gives the number of schools which were subject to section 12 or 13 proposals when they published proposals for self-governing (GM) status. Information on schools subject to section 12 or 13 proposals which have voted against self-governing (GM) status, or which have voted in favour of self-governing (GM) status but not yet published proposals is not held centrally.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list in rank order those grant-maintained schools from which pupils have been permanently excluded, giving in each case (a) the number of such exclusions, (b) the pupil roll of the school and (c) the date it was incorporated as a grant-maintained school.

Mr. Forth: Information on permanent exclusions from maintained schools in England was collected by the Department over a two-year period, starting with summer term 1990, under the national exclusions reporting system (NERS). The results of the survey were published on 23 April and showed that a total of 6,743 permanent exclusions had been reported, with 2,910 in year one and 3,833 in year two. This information was collected for purposes of national aggregation and it is not possible to provide a breakdown of the figures by school or by sector because of assurances given as to confidentiality.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the total number of schools from which his Department has received inquiries about acquiring grant-maintained status; how many ballots have now been held under section 61 of the Education Reform Act; and how many of these resulted in votes to seek grant-maintained status.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department does not keep records of inquiries related specifically to the acquisition of self-governing status. The high overall level of interest is evident from the numbers of publications issued and attendance at conferences. To date, the Department has distributed 2·5 million publications, largely in response to requests for information. Some 3,500 heads and governors have attended the conferences on self-governing status since November 1992.

As of 21 July, 1,241 ballots on self-governing (GM) status have been held in England and 963 of these have resulted in votes in favour of applying for self-governing (GM) status.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 22 June, Official Report, columns 123 -34, if he will list, by local education authority, those grant-maintained schools which still have yet to receive their final budgets for the 1993-94 financial year.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is given in the table. The vast majority of all GM schools will have received their final budgets by the end of this month.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list, in date order, his Department's conferences for head teachers and governors on grant-maintained status, giving in each case (a) details of the venue, (b) the number of invitations issued, (c) the number of (i) head teachers and (ii) governors attending and (d) the cost.

Mr. Robin Squire: Conference invitations are issued in respect of a regional round of conferences in order to allow head teachers and governors to select the most convenient time and location. Schools are invited to send two representatives and generally nominate the head teacher and a governor. A precise breakdown of representatives between these two categories is not available. Further details are set out in the table.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list in rank order local education authorities giving the percentage of pupils in (a) the primary and (b) the secondary sector in grant-maintained schools (i) this summer term and (ii) from next September.

Mr. Robin Squire: The tables give the percentages of state-educated secondary and primary pupils attending schools which are currently self-governing (GM) state schools, or will be from September, together with rankings. Percentages for September are based on schools which have been approved, or which my right hon. Friend is minded to approve (as at 21 July) for starting dates in September. Further applications with proposed starting dates in September are still under consideration.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education in how many ballots on grant-maintained status where a simple majority of parents voted in favour of seeking grant-maintained status the margin between the percentage voting yes and the percentage voting no has been 60:40 or closer; and, of these, how many (i) have been approved, (ii) have been rejected and (iii) have not yet received a decision from him.

Mr. Robin Squire: In 127 (13 per cent.) of the 963 ballots which had resulted in a majority in favour of applying for self-governing (GM) status as at 21 July, 60 per cent. of voters or less voted "yes"; 94 of these applications have been approved, four have been rejected, and my right hon. Friend has not yet reached a decision on the remaining 29.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the purpose of the recent Department for Education regional conferences for the directors and board members of the TECs; and if he will list in each (a) the number of invitations sent, and to which categories of invitee, (b) the numbers from each category attending and (c) the cost of the conference.

Mr. Boswell: The series of regional seminars run by the Department for Education between July 1992 and May 1993 was designed principally for TEC chairmen and TEC business directors with an interest in education. The purpose was to bring TECs up to date on key education issues and policies; to develop a better understanding between the Department and TECs of their respective roles; and to bring together representatives of the education service with TECs at local level.

The information requested for each is in the table.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Potatoes

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make a statement outlining the implications for producers within the United Kingdom of European Commission proposals on member state aid to potato producers.

Mr. Jack: The European Commission's proposals for a common organisation of the market in potatoes would end national support arrangements. If adopted in their present form, this would mean the end of the planting controls and intervention buying arrangements which form part of the Potato Marketing Scheme. The Council of Ministers has yet to make a decision on the proposal. My right hon. Friend stated on 24 June at columns 391-96 the current policy on the United Kingdom potato marketing scheme and our negotiating position on a Community regime for potatoes.

Fur Farms

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list, by county and showing their location, all the fur farms currently operating, the type of fur-bearing animals they are farming and the number of each type of fur-bearing animals in each of the fur farms.

Mr. Soames: Information is not collected on the farming for fur of animals other than mink. Information on individual mink farms, including the exact location and numbers of mink kept, are not divulged. There are at present 13 mink farms operating in England in which approximately 33,000 mink are being kept for fur. These establishments are situated in the following counties:

	Number
Northumberland	1
Lancashire	4
West Yorkshire	2
Staffordshire	1
Suffolk	2
Hampshire	1
Isle of Wight	1
Cornwall	1

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the number of times each British registered fishing vessel formerly Spanish registered or owned by Spanish individuals or companies landed fish in British ports in 1991, 1992 and 1993.

Mr. Jack: Information relating to the fishing operations of individual vessels is confidential. The table contains details of the total number of landings into British ports by the vessels concerned.

	1991	1992	1993[1]
Total number of landings	284	371	95
Vessels making five or more landings	9	18	3
Vessels making less than five landings	37	35	29

[1] To date.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the current holders of 10 m and under fishing licences for area VII F and G.

Mr. Jack: The 10 metre and under licences are general authorities to fish in all appropriate EC waters. All holders of such licences are therefore authorised to fish in area VII F and G. At 1 July 1993 Fisheries Departments had issued 5,193 10 metre and under licences; these could only be listed at disproportionate cost.

Salmonella

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether existing arrangements for the payment of compensation to producers whose poultry breeding flocks are slaughtered because of salmonella will continue when directive 92/117/EEC is implemented in Great Britain.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Producers will continue to receive compensation for poultry breeding flocks slaughtered because of salmonella when Directive 92/117/EEC is implemented in Great Britain. However, the Government has reviewed the existing legislative provisions for the slaughter of poultry, in particular schedule 3(5) of the Animal Health Act 1981, and concluded that they form an unsatisfactory basis for dealing with salmonella in poultry in that the absence of clinical signs in the live bird makes it difficult to distinguish between birds which are infected and those that are not. The Government believe that the principle of distinguishing between infected birds and non-infected birds for the purpose of assessing compensation is correct but that the existing legislation provides an insufficiently clear basis on which to do so.

The Government therefore intend to bring forward proposals as soon as parliamentary time permits and after full consultation with the industry, to amend the Animal Health Act 1981 so as to provide a clear statutory basis for the payment of compensation for birds compulsorily slaughtered because of salmonella. In the meantime, the Government proposed to pay full compensation for all birds compulsorily slaughtered because of salmonella, including those slaughtered since the policy was introduced in March 1989. Payment made since March 1989 will be adjusted accordingly.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements she is making to implement directive 92/117/EEC with regard to the control of salmonella in poultry.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Poultry Breeding Flocks and Hatcheries Order 1993, which brings existing arrangements for the testing and registration of poultry breeding flocks into line with those required under Directive 92/117/EEC, was made today and will come into force on 30 August.

The size of breeding flocks subject to controls is to be raised from 25 to 250 birds. While the bacteriological testing arrangements for grandparent and elite flocks remain unchanged, those for parent breeding flocks are to be eased so that samples are taken and tested at the owner's expense every two weeks instead of every week as at present, and under the supervision of the Ministry every eight weeks instead of every four weeks as at present. Existing statutory testing requirements for breeding flocks of turkeys, ducks and geese will be replaced by voluntary arrangements. There will no longer be a requirement to test poultry breeding flocks for Salmonella pullorum.

Breeding flocks of domestic fowl, turkeys, ducks and geese comprising 250 or more birds of a single species and hatcheries with an incubator capacity of more than 1,000 eggs will be required to register with Agriculture Departments on a simple "once and for all" basis and will no longer be subject to an annual inspection of the premises.

The Government remain committed to firm action against salmonella and continued protection for the consumer while avoiding disproportionate burdens on producers. These changes, which have been the subject of full consultation with interested organisations, are being introduced in advance of the directive coming into force on 1 January 1994 and taken together with the ending of controls on commercial egg-laying flocks earlier this year will significantly reduce burdens on poultry producers and remove some of the disadvantages they currently bear due to more stringent controls compared with their counterparts in other member states.

DEFENCE

Royal Navy

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Navy personnel are currently serving in sea-going posts; how many will be so serving after the planned reduction in the number of ships in the fleet; and, in each case, what percentage of the personnel strength of the Royal Navy will be in sea-going appointments.

Mr. Hanley: There are currently 18,240 trained RN and WRNS personnel serving in sea-going appointments. This represents some 38 per cent. of the total trained manpower. The manpower requirement beyond 1995 will be kept under review in the light of changing circumstances, but it is expected that the proportion of sea-going appointments will remain broadly the same.

Collision, Irish Sea

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the collision between the fishing trawler Amber Rose from Portavogie harbour and the submarine HMS Oppossum in the Irish sea on 14 July; if the submarine was submerged; and if the submarine's radar system was operational on that date.

Mr. Hanley: I can confirm that a minor collision occurred between the Royal Navy submarine HMS Oppossum and the fishing vessel Amber Rose in the Irish sea on 14 July. There were no casualties. HMS Oppossum was on the surface at the time of the collision. An investigation is under way to establish the full facts of the incident.

RAF Order of Battle

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement of the current RAF order of battle.

Mr. Hanley: I refer my hon. Friend to annex D of the 1993 Statement on the Defence Estimates, "Defending Our Future" (Cm. 2270).

Radiation Sample Analysis

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 16 July, Official Report, column 710, what were the criteria adopted in choosing British Nuclear Fuels for the radiation sample analysis contract in 1992; and whether the renewal of BNFL's contract followed a process of competitive tendering.

Mr. Aitken: BNFL won the sample analysis contract in 1992, following competitive tendering during which it was judged to have offered the best bid in terms of value for money and technical competence. Competitive tendering was not considered appropriate for the 1993 renewal. The need to build up a consistent and reliable database makes it advisable to continue with the same contractor for at least three years, provided the technical performance is satisfactory.

Non-departmental Bodies

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 6 July, Official Report, column 113-14, whether a register of interests of appointees to the executive non-departmental bodies sponsored by his Ministry is maintained by (a) his Department and (b) the various bodies; and whether such registers of interests are available for public scrutiny.

Mr. Hanley: A register of interests of appointees is not maintained centrally by my Department or by any of the executive non-departmental bodies. The Services Sound and Vision Corporation (SSVC) is, however, both a registered charity and a company limited by guarantee. Its directors are required under company law to disclose any other directorships they hold. These disclosures are registered at Companies house and therefore available for public scrutiny.

Depots (Rail Connections)

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of his Department's depots had rail connections in (a) 1990, (b) 1991 and (c) 1992.

Mr. Hanley: The number of Ministry of Defence depots with rail connections was 37 in 1990, 21 in 1991 and 20 in 1992.

D Notice System

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) of 26 October 1992, Official Report, column 510, whether the review of the D notice system has been completed.

Mr. Hanley: Responsibility for the management of the D notice system lies with the Defence, Press and Broadcasting Committee (DPBC), a joint forum of Government and media representatives chaired by the Permanent Secretary at the Ministry of Defence. The DPBC decided last year to expand its annual review of the D notices to consider the purpose, scope and operation of the system in the light of international changes and the increased emphasis of openness in Government.

I understand that the DPBC has approved a number of significant changes to the D notice system as a result of the review. The number of notices has been reduced from eight to six and their content and style has been revised to make them more relevant and user-friendly. The notices will now be known as defence advisory notices, and the DPBC has become the Defence, Press and Broadcasting Advisory Committee, better to reflect the voluntary and advisory nature of the system.

The new notices are published today for the first time, with their introduction and an explanation of how the system works, in an open government document. They will come into effect on 1 August. Their publication is intended to promote a better understanding of the system and to be a contribution to greater openness. I am placing a copy of the open government document in the Library of the House.

Military Service Defence Agency

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what performance targets have been set for the Military Survey Defence Agency for 1993-94.

Mr. Hanley: The Military Survey Defence Agency key targets for 1993-94 are:

1. To deliver 3,600 man-days of uniformed personnel in support of operations.
2. To deliver 26,000 man-days of uniformed personnel in support of exercises and military training.
3. To implement the military survey modernisation project by starting the installation check and test phase by 1 October 1993.
4. To meet the following targets for pre-planned production and services:
   (a) originate or revise 425 maps/charts;
   (b) produce 820 digital geographic products;
   (c) reproduce 7,000,000 copies of maps/charts;
   (d) issue from stock 7,000,000 copies of maps/charts.
5. To carry out 5,300 man days training for students from outside military survey.
6. To make further efficiency improvements to the value of 2·5 per cent. of the budget.
7. To keep within the cash allocation of £48,870,000 for 1993-94.

Naval Aircraft Repair Organisation

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what performance targets have been set for the Naval Aircraft Repair Organisation Defence Support Agency for 1993-94.

Mr. Hanley: The Director General Aircraft (Navy), acting as the owner of the agency on behalf of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence under the terms of the agency's framework document has set the following key targets for this financial year:

Quantity:

To complete 100 per cent. of the funded task as detailed in DGA(N)'s tri-service schedule of identified repair work.

Quality:

To reduce by 2 per cent. the weighted number of allied quality assurance publication non-conformances in 1993-94.

Timelines:

To complete more than 85 per cent. of contracts on time in 1993-94 and to increase this figure to over 95 per cent. by the end of 1994-95.

Cost:

To maintain the cost of direct output units at its current level throughout 1993-94 and to achieve a 7·5 per cent. reduction over the 1991-92 launch values by the end of 1994-95.

Efficiency:

To improve the efficiency index (measured work content divided by the measured time taken) from 61·4 per cent. in 1992-93 to 63·3 per cent. by the end of 1993-94.

Productivity:

To improve productivity from the achieved 1992-93 figure of 560 to an average of 575 direct output units per employee by the end of 1993-94.

These targets are similar to those set for last year, but the way the productivity and timeliness targets have been set has changed. The target for productivity for 1992-93 was calculated on the basis of overtime that could not be met from within the available funding. The target for timeliness for 1992-93 was specifically developed as a new method of measuring contract performance for the agency, but there were no historical data to provide a realistic baseline. Nevertheless, improvements of 2 per cent. and 18·3 per cent. were achieved in productivity and timeliness last year.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Disabled People (Access)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee (1) what has been the cost, at current prices, of making the Palace of Westminster more accessible to people with disabilities, both users of the Palace and visitors, since 1 September 1970; and if he will set out the details and cost of each adaptation since that date;

(2) what estimates have been made of the costs of adapting the Palace of Westminster to make it fully accessible to people with disabilities, both as users of the Palace and as visitors; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if, in considering proposals for adapting the Palace of Westminster to make it fully accessible to people with disabilities, both users of the Palace and visitors, he will examine the possibility of phasing the costs over a period of three, five and seven years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ray Powell: The Palace of Westminster's Victorian design presents fundamental obstacles to easy access and movement of persons with disabilities. Improvements have nevertheless been made in certain areas, such as the construction and adaptation of lavatories, the installation of a stairlift to the Grand Committee Room in Westminster Hall, and the provision of sound induction loops in the public galleries of the Chamber and a number of Committee Rooms. It is not possible, however, separately to identify all such improvements or their cost.

The Accommodation and Works Committee has recently received and given preliminary consideration to a comprehensive consultants' report containing a number of recommendations for improvement. It is to be given further consideration in the autumn with the benefit of advice from the all-party group on disablement and from English Heritage. It is hoped that a phased programme of improvements can be agreed which will be incorporated into the programme of works. Estimates for each of the report's recommendations are being prepared.

Consumers Association

Mr. French: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating the Consumers Association to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 1 to 5 November.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Islamic Dress Code

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer on 19 July, Official Report, column 20, if he will seek the views of the female United Kingdom citizens currently employed in the British embassy in Tehran on the imposition of the Islamic dress code.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are well aware of their views.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 19 July, Official Report, column 20, (1) if he will discuss with other non-Islamic countries having embassies in Tehran the imposition of the Islamic dress code on female diplomatic staff, with a view to establishing a common position.

(2) if he will now make representations to the Government of Iran regarding the obligation of female diplomats to conform to the Islamic dress code.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Her Majesty's embassy in Tehran is in touch with other missions in Tehran about a range of issues. It is accepted practice among the diplomatic community, male and female, in Iran to abide by the Islamic dress code.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 19 July, Official Report, column 20, regarding the imposition of the Islamic dress code on female diplomatic staff in Tehran, on what occaions male diplomatic staff have been obliged by foreign Governments to comply with dress codes; and if he will give details.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: All diplomatic personnel, whether male or female, comply with the appropriate foreign dress code whenever it is necessary to enable them to carry out their duties effectively.

Religious Freedom, Russia

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to President Yeltsin on the recent amendment of the 1990 law on religious freedom by the Russian Parliament to restrict foreign Christian missionary work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have raised our concerns at a senior level in the President's Administration and in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. We have called the amendment, which has not yet received President Yeltson's approval, a retrograde step and have drawn attention to Russia's international commitments under the CSCE in relation to religious freedom and the free passage of information.

Vietnamese Boat People

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the sum of money owed to the Hong Kong Government, and by whom, for the cost of keeping the Vietnamese boat people.

Mr. Goodlad: The office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) currently owes the Hong Kong Government approximately 90 million United States dollars for the care and maintenance of refugees in the territory.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when it is expected that all remaining Vietnamese boat people at present being held in detention in Hong Kong will have been repatriated to Vietnam.

Mr. Goodlad: If the 1993 rates of voluntary repatriation and refugee resettlement can be maintained, and there are no more new arrivals, the Hong Kong camps could be empty within three years.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Vietnamese boat people in total had been repatriated to Vietnam from Hong Kong up to 10 July.

Mr. Goodlad: As at 1 July (the latest figures available), 29,893 migrants had returned home voluntarily. A further 627 had been returned under the orderly repatriation programme.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Vietnamese boat people were still being held in detention in Hong Kong as of 10 July.

Mr. Goodlad: As at 1 July (the latest figures available), the Hong Kong camp population was as follows:

	Number
Refugees	2,231
Screened out (after appeal)	24,143
Awaiting screening or results	14,353
Total	40,727

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Japanese Government about supporting an indefinite extension of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has not recently discussed this issue with the Japanese Government. However, Japan agreed to the G7 summit political declaration which supported as an objective the indefinite extension of the non-proliferation treaty.

Cyprus

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many meetings have been held by Her Majesty's Government with leading political members of (a) the Greek Cypriot community and (b) the Turkish Cypriot community, over the past five years.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Ministers have held many meetings with leading Cypriots, including Cypriot Ministers, in this period. They meet more Greek Cypriots, reflecting in particular the size of the Greek Cypriot ethnic community in the United Kingdom and our policy on recognition. The purported declaration of the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" in 1983, placed substantial constraints on ministerial level meetings. Contacts with leaders of the Turkish Cypriot community are maintained chiefly through Her Majesty's high commissioner in Nicosia.

Gibraltar

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent judgment by the European Court of Justice confirming Gibraltar's suspension from an EC air services directive (89/463).

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The judgment has no implications for our title over Gibraltar or for the status of the 1987 airport agreement. We continue to believe that implementation of the agreement, updated as necessary to reflect subsequent directives, would be in the best interests of Gibraltar. It would in particular remove Gibraltar's suspension from EC air liberalisation measures.

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent judgment by the European Court of Justice confirming Gibraltar's suspension from the EC air services directive (89/463).

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The judgment has no implications for our title over Gibraltar or for the status of the 1987 airport agreement. We continue to believe that implementation of the agreement, updated as necessary to reflect subsequent directives, would be in the best interests of Gibraltar. It would in particular remove Gibraltar's suspension from EC air liberalisation measures.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total amount in cash terms and in real terms of housing benefit paid to people (a) aged 16 and 17 years, (b) aged 18 to 24 years and (c) aged 25 years and over for each year from 1980-81 to 1992-93.

Mr. Burt: Housing benefit expenditure by age has been available only since 1990. Expenditure figures for 16 and 17-year-olds are not reliable. The available information is in the table.

Mr. Burt: The available information is in the table.

Note: The source housing benefit expenditure figures are taken from table 9a of "The Growth of Social Security". For years prior to 1988 these include expenditure related to housing costs paid as part of supplementary benefit. The figure for 1989-90 includes community charge rebate.

Households Below Average Income

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 16 July 1992, Official Report, column 948, what was the average equivalised income at April 1993 prices for the poorest 20 per cent. from the latest households below average income analysis, before and after housing costs in 1979, 1981, 1987, 1988-89 and 1990-91 for (i) a pensioner couple, (ii) a single pensioner, (iii) a couple with children, (iv) a couple without children, (v) a single adult with children and (vi) a single adult without children.

Mr. Burt: The information is in the tables. All estimates are subject to sampling error which may affect the validity of comparisons between groups at a point in time and over time. Results for singles and couples will be affected by a discontinuity related to cohabiting. Further information is provided in appendix 10 of Households Below Average Income—1979-1990-91, a copy of which is in the Library.

Pensioners

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of pensioner households have been dependent on state benefits for at least 75 per cent. of their income in each of the last 10 years for which information is available.

Mr. Hague: Such information as is readily available is in the table. Comparable data for 1980 and 1982 to 1986 are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Notes:

1. Pensioner units are defined as single people above state pension age and couples in which the husband is above state pension age.
2. "1990-91" denotes estimates from a combined sample of the 1990 and 1991 Family Expenditure Surveys (FESs). One quarter of the 1991 FES sample has been omitted because of inadequate data on Community Charge Benefit receipt following the delayed issue of Community Charge bills in April 1991. As a result the sample size in that year is too small to provide reliable estimates of pensioners' incomes. For this reason the remaining data for 1991 has been combined with that for 1990.
3. Estimates of the proportion of pensioner units who are dependent on state benefits for at least 75 per cent. of their gross income include those with no income other than state benefits.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many and what proportion of all pensioners, single pensioners and pensioner couples have total incomes of (a) £1, (b) £2, (c) £3, (d) £4 and (e) £5 above income support levels.

Mr. Hague: The information is in the table. As this question seeks to establish pensioners' incomes in relation to income support levels the criteria for assessing pensioner entitlement to income support have been used i.e. "pensioners" are taken to be those aged 60 or over, and the average income bands exclude income derived from sources which would not be taken into account for income support (e.g. housing benefit or attendance allowance).

Both tables are based on data drawn from the 1989 to 1990 and 1991 Family Expenditure Surveys modelled at 1993-94 prices and benefit levels.

Notes:

1. Caseloads have been rounded to the nearest 5,000. Figures in the first two columns may not sum to the total in the final column because of rounding.
2. Each percentage gives the proportion of the total pensioner caseload for the column.
3. Percentages have been rounded to the nearest percentage point.
4. Pensioner benefit unit defined as either:
   (a) Single person aged 60 or over
   (b) Couple where either person is aged 60+
5. Totals include pensioners with capital exceeding the upper earnings limit for income support.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what number and proportion of all pensioners had no income from any source other than from state benefits for each of the last 10 years for which information is available.

Mr. Hague: Such information as is readily available is in the table. Comparable data for 1980 and 1982 to 1986 is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

(3) Estimates of the proportion of pensioner units who are dependent on state benefits for at least 75 per cent. of their gross income include those with no income other than state benefits.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the actual weekly amount received by all pensioners as (a) total social security benefits, (b) occupational pensions and (c) savings income for each of the last 10 years; what were the gross and net weekly total figures; and what was the real terms increase over the last 10 years for which information is available.

Mr. Hague: Such information as is readily available is in the tables. Comparable data for 1980 and 1982 to 1986 is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information the Benefits Agency collects concerning the nature of the disabilities of persons in receipt of invalidity benefit by Benefits Agency district in connection with his review of Government expenditure on benefits.

Mr. Scott: Benefits Agency district offices obtain information on the disease or disorder giving rise to a claim for invalidity benefit from the medical statement issued by the medical practitioner. This information is not collected centrally. District offices have not been asked to provide additional information on the nature of the disabilities of people receiving invalidity benefit in connection with the long-term review of expenditure.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women have had their invalidity benefit restored on the basis of hardship in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland as a whole in the most recent period of time for which records are available.

Mr. Scott: The administration of invalidity benefit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member shortly with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. M. Bichard to Dr. Norman Godman, dated 22 July 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many women have had their Invalidity Benefit restored on the basis of hardship in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland as a whole in the most recent period of time for which records are available.

The information has been obtained in the format requested. The statistics relating to the number of women who have had their Invalidity Benefit paid on the basis of hardship following the decision of a Social Security Commissioner on 1 April 1992 in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland are shown below:

	Number
(a) Strathclyde	[1]215
(b) Scotland	[1]228

[1] Of these totals, 203 cases are contained within one District (Clyde Valley District) which also received a much higher number of applications. The high incidence of hardship cases within this District is being investigated.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will give the numbers of persons in receipt of invalidity benefit in the Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale Benefits Agency district for each year since 1987;

(2) if he will give the current number of persons in receipt of invalidity benefit in the Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale Benefit Agency district.

Mr. Scott: The administration of invalidity Benefit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. M. Bichard to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 22 July 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking if he will give the numbers of persons in receipt of invalidity benefit in the Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale Benefit Agency district for each year since 1987 and the current number of persons in receipt of invalidity benefit in that district.

The information is not available in the format requested because the Benefits Agency was only set up in April 1991 and it is not possible to provide the information requested prior to this date. Separate statistics were not kept for invalidity benefit claimants until May 1991 and a yearly count of the number of recipients is not maintained. The latest available figures show that there were 12,614 people claiming invalidity benefit in the Agency's Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale district at the last working day of June 1993. The figures on the last working day of June 1992 and June 1991 are 11,790 and 10,421 respectively.

The statistics provided include a few customers who have claimed but are not receiving invalidity benefit, eg. because there is underlying entitlement which has been extinguished by the payment of a higher overlapping benefit or where termination action has not been completed. These figures were obtained from a 100 per cent. clerical count of cases in the District/Benefit office.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Means Testing

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if it is intended to amend the level of assumed income from capital that is taken into account in calculating means-tested benefits.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Bow and Poplar (Mrs. Gordon) on 22 July.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what restrictions are placed upon the payment of unemployment benefit in other EC states.

Mr. Burt: Common requirements for payment of unemployment benefit in other EC countries are that a person is involuntarily unemployed, capable of work, registered and available for work.

Age, period of past employment and contribution record are other factors governing entitlement or duration of payment of benefit.

More information can be found in "Social Protection in the Member States of the Community," a copy of which is in the Library.

State Pension

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the regulations covering the start date for payment of the state pension following the attainment of retirement age; and what are the regulations covering the termination date of payment of the state pension.

Mr. Hague: Regulation 16 of the Social Security (Claims and Payments) Regulations 1987—SI 1987/1968—governs both the start and termination dates for payment of retirement pension.

Accommodation Payments

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what efforts are currently undertaken by his Department to secure that payments for rent in advance and deposits for accommodation are available quickly and reliably from the Benefits Agency.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. M. Bichard to Mr. Dafydd Wigley, dated 22 July 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State asking what efforts are currently undertaken by his Department to secure that payments for rent in advance and deposits for accommodation are available quickly and reliably from the Benefits Agency.

I should explain that help with returnable deposits for accommodation has been excluded from the Social Fund (SF) by direction of the Secretary of State.

However, for rent in advance, help from the SF may be given in the form of a Budgeting Loan (BL), where the applicant has been in receipt of Income Support for 26 weeks, or a Crisis Loan (CL) in other cases; these loans are interest-free. CLs are subject to an overriding condition that the payment is necessary to avoid serious risk to health or safety. An exception to this rule is where applicants who receive a Community Care Grant on returning to the community, after a period of institutional or residential care, also need rent in advance.

Decisions on SF applications are made independently by specially trained Social Fund Officers (SFOs). While SFOs are subject to the law and Secretary of State's directions, they still have considerable discretion about whether to make payment, having regard to the circumstances of an individual applicant. These will include consideration of the nature, extent and urgency of the need.

The Secretary of State has set a number of targets for the Benefits Agency one of which is clearance times for budgeting loan applications. The Agency has continued to meet this target, indeed performance improved over the year 1992-93 by two working days, emphasising the Agency's commitment to customer care. Most CL applications continue to be cleared on the day they are made, reflecting the urgent nature of such an application.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Flooding, Llandudno

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what percentage of applicants to the crisis fund following the Llandudno flooding were made from people in receipt of invalidity benefit; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many applications to the crisis fund he received in the aftermath of the Llandudno flooding; what percentage of these have been granted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Alex Carlile, dated 22 July 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many applications to the crisis fund he received in the aftermath of the Llandudno flooding; what percentage of these have been granted and what percentage of these were from people in receipt of invalidity benefit.

The Benefits Agency District of North Wales Coast, which serves the area affected by the flooding, received 187 applications for a Crisis Loan from victims of the flood. All of these applications resulted in an award. Eight of the applications (4·3 per cent.) were from people in receipt of Invalidity Benefit.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what minimum standards of service he has approved for customers of the disability living allowance unit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has approved the charter standard statement which was published today by the Benefits Agency. We welcome this statement, which sets out the business of the unit, advice on contacting staff and the minimum standards of service customers of the unit can now expect.

The publication of the statement underlines and further extends the Benefits Agency's strategy of maintaining and improving standards of service to its customers by establishing targets for the handling and clearance of claims and answering the telephone and correspondence.

By the end of June 874,000 claims for disability living allowance had been made. More than 848,000 claims have been cleared, resulting in 502,000 awards. Early difficulties following the introduction of disability living allowance have now been redressed and I congratulate the unit's staff on their efforts to overcome these problems.

A copy of the statement has been placed in the Library.

Next Steps Agencies

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the annual reports and accounts for each of his next steps agencies will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: I have agreed that the 1992-93 reports and accounts for the four social security agencies operating last year should be published as follows: yesterday those for the Information Technology Services Agency, today those for the Benefits Agency, on 30 July those for the Contributions Agency, and at the end of September those for the Resettlement Agency. Copies of all four reports will be placed in the Library.

The Child Support Agency began operations in April this year. Its first annual report will be for 1993-94.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average sum now paid out annually in occupational pensions for (a) males and (b) females.

Mr. Hague: The average amounts of occupational pension paid in 1990-91 are estimated as £4,200 per annum for males and £2,015 for females at January 1991 prices. Note: Source: 1990 and 1991 Family Expenditure Surveys.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of people who have opted out of the state earnings-related pension scheme into personal pensions and have now allowed those pensions to lapse.

Disability

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to collect annual data on the estimated number of children with disabilities in Wales by region and by nature of disability.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Children Act 1989 requires each local authority to keep a register of disabled children in their areas. There are no plans to collect data centrally on the number of children with disabilities.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement outlining what action will be undertaken by his Department resulting from meetings with the Wales Council for the Disabled to discuss the information award scheme.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: As a result of meetings with the Wales Council for the Disabled and the Welsh Consumer Council during 1992, the published information for users, carers and the general public initiative was set up to run one year. The initiative is nearing its completion and awards will be made on 26 July.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which members of his Department attended the Directoria conference in Brussels between 2 to 4 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the number of recorded cases of organophosphate contamination of humans directly attributable to the handling of sheep dips in Wales in each year since 1985.

Mr. Redwood: The Government operate the suspected adverse reaction scheme, under which persons who believe that they may have suffered a reaction to sheep dip are encouraged to report full details to the Veterinary Medicines Directorate. The number of suspected adverse reaction reports made under the scheme in relation to Wales each year between 1985 and 16 July 1993, which is the latest date for which figures are available, are given as follows. The figures relate to the number of reports, not to the number of people involved.

1986	0
1987	0
1989	0
1990	0
1991	10

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what efforts are currently undertaken by his Department to encourage farmers to report any symptoms of illness or depression suffered during or after the use of sheep dips.

Mr. Redwood: A number of initiatives have been put in hand by the Government to help ensure that those who use sheep dip report any suspected adverse reaction to it. Among other measures the Veterinary Medicines Directorate (VMD) has for a number of years operated a widely publicised suspected adverse reaction scheme, under which persons who believe they may have suffered from an adverse reaction to sheep dip are encouraged to report full details.

A letter was sent in April 1991 by the chief medical officer to all medical practitioners in Great Britain making them aware of the issues involved and alerting them to the need to report details of any suspected adverse reaction to sheep dip. A further letter will be sent to all UK medical practitioners shortly giving further advice on the potential hazards which can arise from misuse of these toxic products.

This letter will draw attention to new leaflets prepared by the National Office of Animal Health and VMD giving detailed guidance on the protection of operators and the environment, including medical advice to doctors and users, and the need to report suspected adverse reactions to the VMD. The leaflet has been circulated to all sheep farmers in the UK and made widely available from HSE, Agricultural Departments and other outlets within the agricultural industry.

Mineral Extraction

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to secure that all new planning permissions for mineral extraction are limited to no more than 20 years, and the revision of existing permissions with the imposition of a 20-year time limit.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: A consultation paper issued last year sought views on ways in which old minerals permissions could be updated and on possible mechanisms for ensuring future periodic updating of minerals permissions generally. The paper set out possible options, one of which was that the current 60-year time limit on pre-1982 minerals permissions be reduced. We hope to consult further on detailed proposals later this year. There are no proposals to change the duration of those minerals permissions granted since 22 February 1982 on which guidance is given in minerals planning guidance note 2.

Asthma

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the extent of links in Wales between opencast mining and the incidence of asthma; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In 1988 the Welsh Office commissioned an independent expert assessment of a report, produced by Drs. Temple, Watkins, Thomas and Rees of Glynneath, which alleged an association between opencast operations and illnesses in the local community. The assessment, by Dr. Peter Elwood, concluded that the data on asthma presented in the Glynneath's doctors' report were flawed and that it was impossible to draw firm conclusions from the report.

The Government's committee on the medical effects of air pollutants has considered the suggestion that opencast coal mining might have a deleterious effect upon the health of those living nearby. No convincing evidence to support this suggestion has been discovered. A recent study by Dr. Temple was considered by the committee. Although it agreed that the results were compatible with an association between opencast coal mining and asthma consultations, the committee considered that further work would be needed to sustain a causal hypothesis.

The Government remain interested in the results of good quality research in this field.

Steroid Abuse

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many deaths in Wales in each year since 1988 are known to have been caused by anabolic steroid abuse; and if he will make a statement.

A wide range of other staff are involved in automatic data processing to various degrees.

Interim Development Orders

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to cancel interim development orders with minimal compensation, where such orders conflict with acknowledged interests of environmental importance.

Mr. Redwood: The Planning and Compensation Act 1991 enables interim development order permissions to be updated by the imposition of modern environmental conditions which do not attract compensation provided they are consistent with the guidance in minerals planning guidance note 9. We have no plans for further measures to amend compensation provisions.

Environment Policy

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to make a statement outlining the impact of his departmental expenditure on the environment of Wales to coincide with the annual allocation of his Department's block grant.

Mr. Redwood: Information on the environmental aspects of my Department's main expenditure programme is already included in the annual report for the Welsh Office, the latest version of which was published in February 1993.

(2) what arrangements his Department makes to ensure that blind and partially sighted people have access to information produced by his Department where it has not been published in alternative media such as braille, large print or tape.

Mr. Redwood: My Department's usual policy is to deal individually with requests for information in forms other than standard print. Where however the information is specifically relevant to numbers of blind or partially sighted people, arrangements are made for it to be available through tape library services.

Housing Subsidy

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the amount of housing subsidy under the Housing Act 1980 that each Welsh housing authority is entitled to in 1993-94; and what is the total for Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Development Board for Rural Wales and district housing authorities are no longer entitled to claim housing subsidy under part VI of the Housing Act 1980. However, district housing authorities may adjust claims made prior to 31 March 1990. No such adjusted claims have been made in this financial year to date.

Nurses

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many nurse pay regrading appeal buy-outs have occurred in each district health autohority area in Wales in 1991, 1992 and to date in 1993; and what was the total cost of buy-out and the average buy-out amount in each authority area.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many nurse pay regarding appeals were outstanding within each district health authority in Wales at the latest available date.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested on outstanding appeals is as shown in the following table:

Health Authority	Appeals at employing authority level	Appeals at all-Wales level	Appeals at national level
Clwyd	0	40	71
East Dyfed	4	79	7
Gwent	4	222	17
Gwynedd	0	113	32
Mid Glamorgan	96	310	39
Pembrokeshire	0	50	0
Powys	0	103	43
South Glamorgan	0	231	29
West Glamorgan	0	83	8
WALES	104	1,231	246

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all those services or functions contracted out in his Department and Agencies, since November 1991, in which the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were not applied.

Mr. Redwood: The Department has not contracted out any services or functions since November 1991 which were previously carried out in-house. The application of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 has therefore not been relevant during that period.

Economically Inactive Persons

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information is held as to the numbers of economically inactive persons in Wales recorded by the 1991 census as (a) housewives, (b) students and (c) long-term sick.

Mr. Redwood: The 1991 census recorded the number of economically inactive residents aged 16 and over in Wales. Of these, 91,226 were students, 160,652 were permanently sick and 303,378 were females in the category "other inactive" which includes persons looking after the family/home.

Correspondence

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy in respect of replying to correspondence to him from hon. Members representing Welsh constituencies.

Mr. Redwood: All right hon. members and leaders of parties in Wales usually receive a reply from me whatever the subject of their inquiries.

All other members are answered by myself, the Minister of State or the Parliamentary Secretary usually in accordance with ministerial responsibilities for different subjects.

We also take into account the addressee of the letter and any special interests of the Ministers.

South Glamorgan Peripheral Distributor Road

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received with regard to the proposed trunking of the south Glamorgan peripheral distributor road; what response he proposes to make to such representations; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: A report submitted by South Glamorgan county council is being considered.

Housing Association Properties

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received in relation to capital grant levels and rent levels in housing association properties and their effect on the incentive to work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I have received several representations in recent months, notably about housing association grant.

ENVIRONMENT

Pollution Inspectorate

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many meetings of local liaison committees were attended by representatives of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution during 1990, 1991 and 1992; and what is his chief inspector's current policy on HMIP representation at local liaison committees.

Mr. Yeo: The number of meetings of local liaison committees attended by representatives of HMIP was as follows:

	Meetings
1990	113
1992	119

Within overall resource constraints and at the discretion of regional managers, HMIP will normally attend: local authority committee meetings where the inspector has identified a positive purpose for attending and will deliver a specific message to the meeting; general meetings where guidance is requested and specific issues are to be discussed, except where there is an application or enforcement procedure pending.

Farm Diversification

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many farm diversification schemes have been implemented following the issue of his planning policy guidance note No. 7—PPG7; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: It is for farmers themselves to decide if they wish to engage in a diversification project. We have no information on the number of such enterprises, either requiring planning permission or otherwise, but new enterprises that are well planned can benefit both farmers and the communities in which they live. We expect local planning authorities to have regard to PPG7 in the exercise of their planning functions.

Shared Housing Ownership

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the grant allocation for individual projects under the Housing Corporation's shared ownership for the elderly programme for the current financial year and for each year since 1989 by region and local authority area.

Mr. Baldry: The Housing Corporation does not have a separate shared ownership programme for the elderly. However, a proportion of its general shared ownership is designated for the elderly. It also runs a leasehold for the elderly scheme, where elderly people may buy a lease from a housing association, which then acts as managing agent. At the allocation stage the corporation's records do not make it possible to distiguish between these two scheme types. It is not yet possible, therefore, to provide a separate figure for allocations to shared ownership schemes for the elderly for 1993-94.

I will arrange for two tables to be placed in the Library, one showing the combined total value of allocations for leasehold for the elderly and shared ownership schemes intended for the elderly for 1993-94 broken down by region and local authority area, and the other showing a breakdown between the two schemes for the earlier years requested. It would not be possible to provide the list of allocations to individual projects requested, except at disproportionate cost.

Environmental Audits

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress made to date by his Department in establishing an environmental audit scheme for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Trade and Technology gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Woodspring (Dr. Fox) on 20 July 1993, Official Report, column 129.

Methyl Bromide

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to (a) establish a target date for cutting methyl bromide use by 50 per cent. in the United Kingdom and (b) bring forward scheduled date for the phasing out of hydrochlorofluorocarbons in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Yeo: The Government have no plans to cut methyl bromide use in the United Kingdom by 50 per cent. We support the Commission's proposal that consumption of HCFCs within the European Community should end by 2015.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions have been undertaken at Council of Ministers level concerning (a) the phasing out of hydrochlorofluorocarbons and (b) reducing levels of methyl bromide; and what were the positions taken by representatives from Denmark, Germany and the Netherlands in the discussions.

Mr. Yeo: Numerous discussions on HCFCs and methyl bromide controls have taken place at the Council of Ministers level over the past year, notably at informal Councils during the renegotiation of the Montreal protocol in Copenhagen. The positions of the three countries mentioned have varied during this time.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has concerning emissions of methyl bromide from chemical plant processes in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not currently available.

Housing Association

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what changes he proposes to make in the arrangements under which local authorities can support housing associations with housing association grant.

Sir George Young: I have no plans at present to make any such changes.

Architects

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward proposals to ensure that only qualified architects are permitted to use the title.

Mr. Baldry: No. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett) on 30 June 1993, Official Report, column 526, and to the answer my right hon. Friend the Minister for Housing, Inner Cities and Construction gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Waterson) on 2 February 1993, Official Report, columns 89-90.

Opencast Coal

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of opencast coal planning applications, size and location of sites in Northumberland and Durham submitted in each year since 1990 and those which have received approval.

Mr. Baldry: This information is not held centrally. According to statistics published by the County Planning Officers Society's committee No. 3, however, the information is as follows:

Planning Applications

	Number of applications	Area (hectares)	Tonnage (thousands)
Durham
1990-91	21	642	3,213
1991-92	8	174	595

1991-92	7	197	706

Environmental Tribunal

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration has been undertaken by his Department for the establishment of an environmental tribunal in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Yeo: The recent White Paper on open government announced that we are considering the need for a tribunal to handle appeals under the Environmental Information Regulations. We are not thinking of setting up an environmental tribunal with any wider remit.

Environmental Assessments

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to support the use of strategic environmental assessments within policies, plans and programmes adopted within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Yeo: In "This Common Inheritance: The Second Year Report"—Cm 2068—the Government restated their commitment to integrating environmental concerns into decision making at all levels.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of the capacity of the proposed Nirex deep repository for radioactive waste would be required to dispose of (a) thermal oxide reprocessing plant operational wastes if British Nuclear Fuels plc is not allowed to satisfy foreign waste return clauses using substitution for equivalent waste, (b) THORP operational wastes if substitution is allowed, (c) THORP decommissioning wastes and (d) wastes arising from stage 3 decommissioning of existing nuclear facilities.

Mr. Yeo: The capacity of the proposed Nirex deep disposal facility for low and intermediate-level radioactive waste has yet to be established.

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action has been taken to ensure that ozone-destroying substances consumed by his Department are identified as controlled wastes when they are no longer in use.

Mr. Yeo: My Department has taken action to deal with the proper disposal of the most significant ozone-depleting substances used on our premises. New guidance for procurement and accommodation officers instructs them to ensure that service contractors comply with best practice including professional guidance and relevant British standards.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by what date his Department's use of ozone-depleting chemicals will conform to EC regulations on limits on these chemicals.

Mr. Yeo: The current EC regulations control the production and consumption of ozone-depleting substances not their use.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the quantity of ozone-depleting substances recycled within the Department and returned to the manufacturer.

Mr. Yeo: Figures for the quantity of ozone-depleting substances recycled within the Department and returned to the manufacturer are not available. It is the Department's policy to recycle or dispose of such substances in an environmentally responsible manner.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Enviornment which current uses of ozone-depleting chemicals by his Department are considered essential.

Mr. Yeo: None of my Department's uses of ozone-depleting chemicals will require continued production under the Montreal protocol or European Community essential use procedures.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much funding has been allocated or spent to deal specifically with measures to reduce the Department's consumption of ozone-depleting substances.

Mr. Yeo: Figures for how much the Department is spending to reduce its consumption of ozone-depleting substances are not available. My Department is taking a number of initiatives to eliminate the use of these substances on its premises including: the purchase of fridges free of ozone depleting substances, the replacement of halon fire extinguishers, a ban on the purchase of correction fluids containing 1.1.1-Trichloroethane; and a programme to identify and then replace CFCs and HCFCs in air conditioning plant.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures have been taken to ensure that ozone-destroying substances in use by his Department, identified as controlled waste under the Environmental Protection Act 1990, do not reach the atmosphere.

Mr. Yeo: New guidance for procurement and accommodation officers instructs them to ensure that service contractors comply with best practice including professional guidance and relevant British standards.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many chlorofluorocarbon domestic fridges are contained within Department buildings.

Mr. Yeo: Figures for the number of CFC domestic fridges contained within our many premises are not available. The numbers will decline as we continue our policy of replacing them with ozone-friendly fridges as they come to the end of their useful life.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what targets have been set for the recycling of ozone-depleting chemicals within departmental buildings.

Mr. Yeo: No specific targets have been set. New guidance for procurement and accommodation officers instructs them to ensure that service contractors comply with best practice, including professional guidance and relevant British standards.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many catastrophic leaks of ozone-depleting substances have occurred within Department buildings in the last five years.

Mr. Yeo: None.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of his Department's consumption of ozone-depleting substances become controlled waste in terms of section 33 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Yeo: Figures are not kept for the amount of ozone-depleting substances removed from departmental premises. My Department has just appointed consultants to review our environmental management systems and, as part of their brief, they will consider the need for such records.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many CFC and chlorofluorcarbon and hydrochlorofluorocarbon installations are contained within Department buildings.

Mr. Yeo: No central records are kept of CFC and HCFC installations contained within departmental buildings, but the Department has just appointed consultants to review our environmental management systems and the development of procedures for keeping such records is part of their brief.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance has been sought and received on alternatives or substitutes for the ozone-destroying chemicals in use by his Department.

Mr. Yeo: My Department has sought and received advice on substitutes for ozone-depleting chemicals from a variety of sources.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to purchase for his Department only ozone-friendly fridges that do not contain chlorofluorocarbons or hydrochlorofluorocarbons.

Mr. Yeo: My Department's policy is to buy fridges which do not contain ozone-depleting substances in either the refrigerant or the insulation.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many portable halon fire extinguishers are contained within departmental buildings; and what measures are being taken to ensure their recycling and replacement.

Mr. Yeo: No such extinguishers are contained within the buildings for which my Department has lead responsibility.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what the latest available figures are for the Department's total purchase of chlorofluorocarbons and hydrochlorofluorocarbons.

Mr. Yeo: Figures on the total amount of CFCs and HCFCs purchased by the Department are not available. It is the Department's policy to eliminate the use of ozone-depleting substances on its premises.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what quantity of HCFC 22 is purchased by the Department per annum.

Mr. Yeo: Figures on the amount of HCFC 22 purchased annually are not available. It is my Department's policy to eliminate the use of ozone-depleting chemicals on its premises.

Temporary Accommodation

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many households were in temporary accommodation for each year since 1978 (a) in total and (b) in the north-west region.

Sir George Young: Information is reported quarterly to the Department—half-yearly before 1984—on homeless households for whom local authorities have accepted responsibility to secure permanent accommodation, under the homelessness provisions of the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977 and part III of the Housing Act 1985.

The available estimates of the number of such households in temporary accommodation in England and in the north west at 31 December, including some on whom inquiries had not yet been completed, are as follows:

	England	North west
1978	[1]3,700	[2]—
1979	[1]5,590	[2]—
1980	[1]4,710	[2]—

Housing Finance Survey

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the 1993 Association of District Councils/Association of Metropolitan Authorities housing finance survey; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The joint Association of District Councils and Association of Metropolitan Authorities housing finance survey provides a useful contribution to the information which the Department gathers during the course of the financial year, and I was pleased to have a discussion with the associations about the 1993-94 survey at the meeting of the Housing Consultative Council on 7 July. My Department will, as usual, form a view of the emerging picture on local authority housing finance, and all of this information will be taken carefully into account in the decisions we take, including in the context of the public expenditure survey, which will conclude towards the end of the year.

Local Government

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total gross expenditure on local government in 1991-92 prices for each year since 1970-71.

Mr. Baldry: The available information is:

	Total gross expenditure (England) at 1991-92 prices (£ million)
1980-81	56,570
1981-82	55,081

Housing Welfare Services

Dr. Liam Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what decision he has reached on the outcome of the consultation exercise on housing welfare services, which was conducted earlier in the current year by his Department and the Welsh Office.

Sir George Young: When the provision of welfare services to elderly people in local authority sheltered housing was put in doubt following the judgment of the Court of Appeal in the Ealing case, the Government acted immediately to provide protection. New powers were taken in the Leasehold Reform, Housing and Urban Development Act 1993, and my Department and the Welsh Office issued a consultation paper about the long-term arrangements for local authority housing welfare services. We have now decided how to proceed, taking careful account of the information and views expressed by local authorities and others.

First, we have decided to leave in place indefinitely the powers for local authorities to provide housing welfare services to their tenants. This will give housing authorities the long-term certainty that they need, and will be widely welcomed.

Second, we have decided that some of the welfare services which may be provided by wardens in sheltered accommodation, and which are concerned with the provision of essential care, should no longer be charged to the housing revenue account. These services are those of the kind which involve helping tenants into and out of bed; toileting, dressing, feeding and bathing; administering medication; and nursing care. Instead, these services should be funded from the general funds of local authorities, and the appropriate public resource transfer will be considered. The exclusion of these services from the housing revenue account, will be subject to the making of an order, on which consultation will be conducted in the normal way. It will not affect authorities powers to provide these services.

Remaining housing welfare services provided by wardens should be able to be charged to the housing revenue account, but local authorities will need to consider this carefully in each individual case.

We are satisfied that these decisions and proposals will produce no disruption to the services provided to elderly people in sheltered housing schemes, consistent with the commitment that the Government's have given. There should be no implications for tenants' existing entitlements to housing benefit.

During the consultation on wardens' welfare services in sheltered housing schemes, a broader range of issues has been drawn out, which concern the role of all social housing managers. These issues again fall into two groups. First, those which concern the powers given to housing management; and second, the source of the funds to pay for management activities.

Housing managers do need the ability to use broad powers. The primary role of professional council housing management is to ensure that housing is properly utilised, is kept in good repair and that rents are collected. But in cases of special needs, and in the most difficult and challenging housing estates, the responsibility of managers covers a wide range of functions, alongside the efficient and effective delivery of the normal estate management duties. The Government have worked with local authorities, through a range of policies and programmes, to encourage and support a better life for tenants on estates. Additional services are required by these programmes. In some instances, managers may need to provide these services themselves. Often, they can better act as co-ordinators and facilitators of services provided by other agencies.

It does not follow that all the costs of these additional services should be paid for from rents or from the subsidy provided by central government to housing revenue accounts. Rents are paid by tenants essentially towards housing costs, and the housing revenue account is primarily an account for the costs of meeting landlord functions. Local authorities therefore need to consider carefully, within the requirements of schedule 4 to the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, which costs should be charged to their housing revenue accounts, and which should be funded from elsewhere.

There has been much debate on these issues during consultation on the proposals for welfare services. It may be that some further discussion of the wider role of social housing managers would be helpful to provide a greater degree of understanding and clarity. The Government want to ensure that their policies of working with local housing authorities to assist tenants and for better housing estates remain strong. My Department and the Welsh Office will shortly consult local authority associations about how best to approach this, including whether it would be helpful to issue a departmental circular.

Direct Labour

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take against those local authorities whose direct labour or services organisations made significant financial losses in 1991-92.

Mr. Baldry: So far this year, 60 statutory notices under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 and the Local Government Act 1988 haved been served on 38 different local authorities in respect of financial failure in 1991-92. My right hon. Friend has now considered the responses of nine of the authorities on whom notices were served on 25 January and 7 April. He has today given directions under section 19B of the 1980 Act to the London borough of Hammersmith and Fulham—building maintenance and highways and sewerage—and under section 14 of the 1988 Act to the London borough of Waltham Forest—ground maintenance.

The effect of these directions is to require the authorities to seek the Secretary of State's consent if they wish to award the work, or elements of the work to their in-house labour force following retendering which is currently under-way.

He has decided to take no further action in respect of financial failure in 1991-92 by:

(a) Canterbury (building maintenance, highways and sewerage, sport and leisure management), Daventry (highways and sewerage), Hampshire (highways and sewerage), Liverpool (highways and sewerage), Southwark (ground maintenance, highways and sewerage, refuse collection, vehicle maintenance) and Stoke-on-Trent (building maintenance, highways and sewerage other cleaning, refuse collection), because they met financial objectives in 1992-93,

(b) Canterbury (school and welfare catering) Sandwell (building maintenance) and StokeOon-Trent (works of new construction over £50,000) because, despite recording losses in 1992-93, they have provided strong evidence that financial objectives will be net in 1993-94.

(c) Canterbury (other catering) because the work has been contracted out.

Canterbury, Southwark, Stoke-on-Trent and Sandwell haved been asked to provide quarterly financial returns to the Department.

He is still considering responses from the London borough of Camden—building maintenance—and from Hereford and Worcester county council—building maintenance—to notices served on them on 25 March and 7 April respectively and responses from the remaining 27 authorities on which notices were served during May and June.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has now considered the responses made by the London borough of Lambeth to the five notices served on it, on 24 March, under section 19A of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 and section 13 of the Local Government Act 1988; and what action he proposes to take.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend has considered carefully the responses he has received from the London borough of Lambeth to the statutory notices served on the council on 24 March, and has given today four directions to the authority, under section 19B of the Local Government Planning and Land Act 1980 and section 14 of the Local Government Act 1988.

These measures effectively prevent the direct labour organisation from carrying out further work on highway maintenance, including street lighting, after 1 April 1994, except for emergency work, snow clearance, and gritting roads; prevent the DLO from carrying out work on the repair and maintenance of non-educational public buildings; restrict the amount of housing maintenance work which can be carried out by the DLO to two out of the three existing contracts and provide that the Secretary of State's consent is required before the DLO can carry out further work after 1 April 1994. In addition, the directions require the authority to submit all outstanding accounts to the Department by 31 December 1993 or be prevented from carrying out the relevant work after 31 July 1994.

Water Act 1989

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the operation, by water companies, of the code of practice on conservation, access and recreation, approved under the provisions of the Water Act 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The standing committee set up by the Government on the code of practice—comprising representatives from conservation, heritage and recreation bodies, the water industry, the National Rivers Authority and Government Departments—has recently reported on the operation of the code. The report, which has been placed in the Library of the House, confirms that the water industry is carrying forward the environmental policies of its predecessors and in doing so is reflecting the guidance provided in the code on meeting statutory environmental duties.

At the time of privatisation, it was widely feared that there would be a deterioration in the conservation activities of the water industry and in its provision for public access and recreation. The report shows that this has not occurred. On the contrary, the indications are that access is being extended and facilities improved.

The report also highlights the overall high standard of annual reports published by the water companies, since privatisation, on their work in relation to conservation, access and recreation.

Conservation

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the implementation in the land use planning system of the new EC directive on the conservation of natural habitats and of wild fauna and flora; and when the Government will publish the planning policy guidance note on nature conservation.

Mr. Curry: The Government expect to lay draft regulations to implement the planning aspects of the EC habitats directive in Great Britain in the autumn. They will provide for the formal designation of special areas of conservation—SACs—pursuant to the habitats directive and of special protective areas—SPAs—pursuant to the birds directive. There are currently 72 designated SPAs.

We are continuing to work on the details of the implementation of the directive, but our current proposals are to require decisions taken under the planning and related legislation to accord with the relevant requirements of the directive. The draft regulations will, it is proposed, include a requirement to take appropriate steps under that legislation to help meet the obligation under the directive to avoid significant deterioration of natural habitats and the habitats of species in designated SPAs and SACs. Where a proposed development is likely to have a significant effect on an SAC or SPA, and is not directly connected with or necessary to site management, the local planning authority or other decision taker will be required to assess the proposal for its implications on the conservation objectives for which the area was designated.

The regulations will provide that development may proceed if the assessment shows that it will not adversely affect the integrity of the site. If the assessment indicates that a negative effect on the nature conservation interest will result, the development may only be allowed if there are no alternative solution and if there are imperative reasons of overriding public interest, including those of social or economic nature. There are stricter considerations for sites which host priority natural habitats or species, which are considered to be in danger of extinction.

The Department of the Environment and the Welsh Office will publish the planning policy guidance note on nature conservation after Parliament has considered the draft Regulations and before they come into force. The PPG will provide guidance on how the Government's policies on the conservation of our natural heritage should be reflected in land use planning. It will also set out the main obligations under both domestic and international law, which local planning authorities need to know in drawing up development plans and in taking planning decisions.

The Scottish Office will publish an explanatory circular at about the same time, and intends to issue in draft in the autumn more comprehensive guidance for local authorities and others on the natural heritage in Scotland.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of the total local authority grant distribution is influenced by the number of single-parent families living within an authority's area.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 20 July 1993]: The distribution of revenue support grant to local authorities depends on the difference between each authority's standard spending assessment and its income from business rates and the council tax. It is not possible to say how much of the grant distribution is attributable to any one of these influences.

The proportion of children living in single-parent families forms one component of the additional needs, children at risk and children's social index indicators used to calculate the SSA elements for education and personal social services. The proportion of persons living in single adult households with children under age 16 is also one component of the all-ages social index used to calculate the SSA elements for all other services and for personal social serevices for people aged 18 to 64 years.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of the total grant distribution for local authorities is determined by the percentage of households (a) without access to an inside lavatory and (b) sharing accommodation.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 20 July 1993]: The distribution of revenue support grant to local authorities depends on the difference between each authority's standard spending assessment and its income from business rates and the council tax. it is not possible to say how much of the grant distribution is influenced by any one of these elements.

The proportions of persons in households without exclusive use of a bath or inside lavatory and in shared accommodation are two of the five components of the all ages social index used to calculate the SSA elements for all other services—for shire districts only—and for personal social services for people aged between 18 and 64 years. The proportion of persons in shared accommodation also is one component of the children's social index used to calculate the SSA element for children's social services.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the validity of the 1991 census data on (a) the percentage of households sharing accommodation and (b) the number of households with an outside lavatory as measures of housing need as part of the standard spending assessment system.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 20 July 1993]: The proportions of persons in households in shared accommodation and without exclusive use of a bath or inside lavatory are two of the five components of the all ages social index used to calculate the SSA elements for all other social services—for Shire district services—and for personal social services for people aged between 18 and 24 years. The appropriateness of the index and its components are being considered in consultation with the local authority associations, as part of the SSA review which is underway at present.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made as to the extent to which declining school populations put additional cost per pupil burden on local authorities; and if he will consider recognising such costs as part of the review of SSAs currently being undertaken.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 22 July 1993]: None. No evidence has yet been presented as part of the current review of standard spending assessments on the extent to which declining school populations create unavoidable additional costs per pupil in providing a common level of service.

Local Authority Capital Receipts

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will update the forecast of local authorities' extra capital expenditure arising from the temporary relaxation in the capital receipt rules; and when he expects to consult the local authority associations about the effect to date of the relaxation.

Mr. Baldry: Local authorities' estimates of the capital receipts they expect to receive during the period of the temporary relaxation in the rules will be published in due course once authorities' returns have been received and processed. It is for local authorities to decide the spending of their usable capital receipts. We will consider any representations on this subject made by the local authority associations at the meeting of the Consultative Council on Local Government Finance on 22 July.

EC Habitats Directive

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those coastal and offshore sites which his Department is considering for inclusion on a list of special areas of conservation under the EC habitats directive; and if he will place in the Library a map identifying them.

Mr. Yeo: The Joint Nature Conservation Committee is co-ordinating work of the statutory nature conservation agencies in identifying candidates for the United Kingdom national list of sites under the habitats directive. It is not yet in a position to make recommendations.

Parking Penalties

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines are issued to London local authorities regarding consistency in penalties for parking on single yellow lines and residents' parking meters by (a) private and (b) public traffic wardens; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: I have been asked to reply.

My Department issued guidance to London local authorities in August 1992—"Traffic Management and Parking Guidance", local authority circular 5/92, paragraph 12.5. This says that penalties under the new local authority parking enforcement system should broadly correspond with the levels of fixed penalties for the non-endorsable parking offences enforced by the police and the traffic warden service.

SCOTLAND

Road Accidents

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what he intends to do to reduce road accident casualties among (a) children under five years of age, (b) children of five to 16 years of age, (c) pensioners and (d) pedestrians in (i) rural areas and (ii) urban areas; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government have set a target of reducing road accident casualties by one third by the year 2000. I am very glad to say that substantial progress has been made in reducing fatal and serious casualties. In 1992, these had been reduced by 37 per cent. from the baseline (the average casualty numbers between 1981 and 1985). Progress has been slower with total casualties. These are down 11 per cent. from the baseline. Much therefore remains to be done to meet the challenging one-third target.

The casualty reduction target can only be tackled by multi-disciplinary and multi-agency effort. Central Government work closely with local government, with the police and with the specialised road safety organisations in the fields of engineering enforcement and education.

Analyses have already identified the vulnerable road users in Scotland, and actions are in hand to improve safety amongst them. The Scottish Office Education Department and the Scottish Road Safety Campaign have taken initiatives to improve the road safety training and education of school age children, particularly as pedestrians but also as pedal cyclists. Hard hitting television advertising is being broadcast to target the most vulnerable school age pedestrians, namely boys between 8 and 14-years-old. For the pre-school age group, the Scottish Road Safety Campaign has produced a videofilm of simple safety rules for showing in playgroups and nurseries. The video is complemented by a leaflet for parents. The Scottish Office is taking independent advice from consultants on the options for creating a Children's Traffic Club for three to five-year-olds in Scotland. For the elderly, road safety messages are being placed on public transport and on posters for issue through local road safety officers and social work departments. Later in the year, elderly people will be provided with reflective shopping bags to carry as a conspicuity aid.

Most pedestrian casualties happen on local roads and local authorities are being encouraged to draw up safety plans and to undertake local safety schemes to tackle these problems. The Scottish Office supports these efforts by helping to underpin local accident, investigation and prevention units, and by the adoption of policies—particularly relating to vehicle speed—designed to promote traffic calming. The Scottish Office has issued revised criteria for setting speed limits on local roads, and is taking part in an examination of ways to reduce vehicle speeds through villages. Guidance has been issued on the creation of 20 mph speed limit zones, on variable speed limits, and on the introduction of automatic cameras to detect speed and red light offenders. Traffic calming regulations are being prepared to clarify the types of speed reducing engineering measures which are acceptable. It is expected that traffic calming will have much to contribute towards casualty reduction in urban and rural situations.

Bed-and-Breakfast Accommodation

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will conduct an investigation into bed-and-breakfast establishments to assess their suitability as emergency and as long-term accommodation for the homeless in respect of cleanliness and available facilities.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is for local housing authorities to ensure that bed-and-breakfast establishments which provide short-term accommodation for homeless people are suitable for that purpose; £7·5 million extra capital allocations were made available to authorities in December 1992 targeted on projects reducing the use of bed-and-breakfast accommodation and assisting single-parent families.

Police Reports

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each procurator fiscal area for each of the last five years (a) the total number of reports submitted by the police, (b) the total number marked "no further proceedings", (c) the total number proceeded with and (d) the total number resulting in conviction; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is as follows:

Nursing Homes

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the rate of staff turnover in (a) NHS geriatric units, (b) local authority nursing homes, (c) voluntary body nursing homes and (d) private sector nursing homes.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is not centrally available.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the qualifications of, and ratio of qualified staff to residents (a) in NHS geriatric units and (b) in nursing homes run by (i) local authorities, (ii) voluntary bodies and (iii) private owners.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is not held centrally. Data are available, however, for medical and nursing staff in the NHS and nursing staff in nursing homes registered under the Nursing Homes Registration (Scotland) Act 1938. This information is given in the tables:

NHS staff in the specialty of Care of the Elderly as at 30 September 1992

	Whole-time equivalent
Doctors	280
Nursing staff	9,276
Qualified	4,729
Unqualified	4,548

Note: Data refer to doctors working in the specialty of geriatric medicine and nursing staff in the specialty of care of the elderly. No information is available on staff working in other specialties who treat elderly patients.

[2]Information on occupancy is not currently centrally available; the number of beds is the nearest indicator as occupancy levels will generally exceed 90 per cent.

Psychotic Patients

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what information he has on psychotic patients who have been discharged from hospital and found no bed available when they tried to return;

(2) how many psychotic patients seeking re-admission in each health board area have been sent to a bed-and-breakfast hotel because no hospital bed was available.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is not centrally available. No individual would be refused admission to a hospital bed where it is considered clinically necessary.

Mental Health Officer

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary fo State for Scotland if he will give the reasons for the withdrawal of the designation mental health officer.

Mr. Stewart: There are no plans to withdraw the designation mental health officer.

Coastal Zone Management Scheme

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what studies his Department is carrying out into a coastal zone management scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: The Scottish Office earlier this year commissioned a review of issues affecting the Scottish coast as a first step in considering how best to take forward in Scotland the Government's response to the House of Commons Select Committee on the Environment's report on coastal zone protection and planning. It is expected that the review will be completed this autumn.

Care Assistants

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will issue a circular outlining the division of responsibilities between care assistants and nursing staff.

Mr. Stewart: There is no need to issue a circular on the division of responsibility between nurses and care assistants. The duties and responsibilities of the two groups and the training they receive are quite distinct. Skill mix arrangements are best determined locally.

Smoking

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prosecutions have been carried out in Scotland in each of the last five years in respect of the sale of cigarettes to minors; how many of these resulted in convictions; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not separately identifiable within the Scottish Office Home and Health Department's classification of crimes and offences.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action has been taken towards achieving the targets for reducing smoking prevalence among (a) adults and (b) children as outlined in the 1992 White Paper, "Scotland's Health—A Challenge To Us All"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Action to reduce smoking prevalence at United Kingdom level has included increases in tobacco duty; the tightening of the voluntary agreement with the tobacco industry on tobacco advertising; the requirement for stronger and more prominent labelling of tobacco products; and the implementation of the Children and Young Persons (Protection from Tobacco) Act 1991, strengthening the law against the sale of cigarettes to children.

Additionally, within Scotland, action has been initiated on the range of measures identified in "Scotland's Health —A Challenge To Us All". In particular, the Health Education Board for Scotland launched a major new mass media initiative in the autumn of 1992. The campaign features a national freephone service providing smoking cessation advice and literature; and between October 1992 and 15 July 1993, over 170,000 calls had been received. The board is also developing a smoking strategy in consultation with relevant organisations. Within the NHS in Scotland, the target of achieving virtual smoke-free status by the end of May 1993 has been achieved.

Smoking has been a major focus in the discussions the Chief Medical Officer has had with COSLA, the STUC, Scottish Homes and the Scottish Sports Council about the contribution those bodies can make to health promotion. I have also met employers' representatives in Scotland to discuss their role in promoting health in the workplace, including the importance of having in place clear policies on smoking.

Recognising the importance of influencing children, the new national curriculum guidelines for the 5 to 14 age group which were issued in March 1993, include guidance on health education with smoking as a key feature.

More recently we have published a popular version of "Scotland's Health—A Challenge To Us All" which highlights the need to reduce smoking and gives advice on how to achieve this. The document was issued widely to local authorities, schools, health boards, general practitioners, employers organisations, medical professions and voluntary organisations.

Community Care

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average length of time taken to prepare a patient who has been in hospital for most of his or her life for discharge under the care in the community legislation; and if he will conduct an investigation into the success of the policy.

Mr. Stewart: Patients who have spent many years in hospital receive careful preparation for discharge to community care. The length of time taken to prepare discharge varies widely from case to case and will depend on the patient's mental and physical condition, the nature of their illness, the length of time they have been in hospital, the availability of rehabilitation services, and the availability of suitable accommodation and support services in the community to help the patient after discharge. The primary objective for all concerned is that no patient should be discharged until they are well prepared and appropriate services are in place in the community to support them.

The Scottish Office will shortly issue a circular describing the latest monitoring arrangements for evaluating the effectiveness of the community care reforms.

NHS Trusts

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the types of benefits in addition to salary which are available only to NHS senior managers in boards of trusts, and their annual value in each case.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is not available centrally as individual NHS trusts have the power to employ staff on such terms as they consider appropriate to their individual circumstances.

Fluoridation

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy that fluoridation of drinking water should require the consent of the elected representatives of the population concerned.

Mr. Stewart: Under the Water (Fluoridation) Act 1985, water authorities may increase the fluoride content of public water supplies on the application of health boards. As regards the future composition of water authorities, my right hon. Friend has at present nothing to add to paragraphs 3.21 to 3.24 of the White Paper "The Structure of Local Government" published earlier this month.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how the interdepartmental review group on the Forestry Commission will operate in relation to the hearing of evidence and the publication of findings.

Sir Hector Monro: The forestry review group established by my right hon. Friend has received many representations from individuals, organisations and agencies with an interest in forestry matters. There are no plans for it to take evidence other than by such written submissions and its report, which will take the form of policy advice to Ministers, will be confidential to them.

Net Sizes

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will bring forward proposals that the carriage of monofilament nets, above the mesh size relevant to the catching of salmon, should be legal; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: My right hon. Friend has no plans to amend the Inshore Fishing (Prohibition of Carriage of Monofilament Gill Nets) (Scotland) Order 1986.

Parole Board

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to replace part-time members of the Parole Board with full-time, salaried officials; what consultations he is undertaking in relation to such a change; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 21 July 1993]: My right hon. Friend has no plans to replace part-time members of the Parole Board with full-time salaried officials.

Low Pay

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what was the change in income of the lowest-paid 10 per cent. of the population between 1979 and 1991 expressed in real terms;

(2) what were the average earnings of the lowest-paid decile of the population in (a) 1979 and (b) 1991 in (i) 1979 prices and (ii) 1991 prices;

(3) what was the average income of one-parent families in (a) 1979 and (b) 1991 expressed in (i) 1979 prices and (ii) cash prices;

(4) what was he threshold wage level for the lowest paid 10 per cent. of the population in 1991, expressed in 1979 prices.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 21 July 1993]: Information relating to the threshold level of the lowest 10 per cent. of the earnings of full-time employees, in 1979 and 1991, is shown in the table. Information relating to average earnings within these decile ranges is not available. Information on income for the lowest paid 10 per cent. and for one-parent families, is not available at the level of detail requested.

Lowest Decile of Gross Weekly Earnings of Full-time Employees

	April 1979		April 1991
	Males £	Females £	Males £	Females £
Earnings at current prices	60·6	40·1	152·0	115·9
Earnings expressed in 1979 prices	60·6	40·1	62·0	47·3

Sources: The New Earnings Survey and the general index of retail prices.
Notes: 1. Relates to employees on adult rates of pay (men aged 21 and women aged 18, or over, in 1979) whose pay was not affected by absence.
2. Based on a 1 per cent. sample of employees on PAYE schemes.
3. Combined information for males' and females' pay deciles is not available for 1979.

One-parent Families

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many single-parent households were headed by (a) teenage women and (b) teenage men in (i) 1979 and (ii) 1991 or the latest available date.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 21 July 1993]: The 1991 census recorded 2,172 households in Scotland consisting of one female aged 16 to 19 and one or more children aged under 16. The corresponding number of households headed by a male aged 16 to 19 was 42. The eldest person may or may not be the parent of the others.

Families headed by someone aged 16 to 19 but living with other adults are not included. Further information on such families will be contained in the 1991 census report on household and family composition (10 per cent.), which is due to be published in spring 1994.

Comparable figures are not available for 1979 nor from the 1981 census.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many single-parent families there were in (a) 1979 and (b) 1991 or at the latest available date.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 21 July 1993]: It is estimated from the 1991 census that there were 132,000 lone parent families with dependent children in Scotland. Comparable figures are not available for 1979 and data from the 1981 census for lone parent families are not directly comparable owing to a different treatment of co-habitation.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the percentage of people who are single parents in such age groups as he has available.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 21 July 1993]: Estimates for Scotland of the number of lone parents are available only from the census of population. Relevant information from the 1991 census is not currently available, but will be contained in the 1991 census report on household and family composition (10 per cent.), which is due to be published in spring 1994.

Lands Tribunal

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to introduce measures to overturn the decision of the Lands Tribunal for Scotland in the case of Robb v. Kyle and Carrick District Council (1989) in relation to succession to tenancy.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 22 July 1993]: None.

Geriatric Patients

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his policy for the provision of hospital beds for the continuing care of geriatric patients, giving figures for existing and planned future NHS bed numbers in each of the units of Lothian health board; and what additional funding he is planning for nursing and medical provision for social work departments to meet the needs for alternative community care for people by such changes.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 22 July 1993]: Assessment of the need for national health service accommodation for the continuing care of geriatric patients is a matter for health boards. The provision of such accommodation is a matter for boards as purchasers and the relevant unit or trust as the provider.

Information on NHS bed numbers for quarters ending 31 December 1992 and 31 March 1993, the latest available, are shown in the table below. Lothian health board are currently reviewing their strategy for the care of the elderly. Until that review is complete figures for future NHS beds for the elderly are not available.

Substantial additional resources of £81 million have already been provided to local authorities to implement the community care proposals. This will increase to £106 million in 1994-95 and £158 million in 1995-96. In addition, my right hon. Friend recently announced an increase of £28 million in the funds available for bridging finance to facilitate the transfer of patients from hospitals into the community.

Community Health

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) community psychiatric nurses, (b) health visitors, (c) community midwives, (d) practice nurses, (e) other community nurses and (f) general practitioners were employed by the NHS in inner London for each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: The available information is shown in the tables. Figures for tables 1 and 2 are not directly comparable as district health authorities (DHAs) and family health services authorities (FHSAs) boundaries differ.

Community psychiatric nurses, health visitors, community midwives, other community nurses, (whole-time equivalents) in inner London at 30 September, 1987-91

	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991
Community Psychiatric Nurses	160	170	200	230	190
Health Visitors	440	640	660	720	720
Community Midwives	150	160	210	200	130
Other Community Nurses	720	640	860	880	810

Notes: (i) Date applicable to DHAs in "inner London" as defined in the Tomlinson report; collected from DHAs, and, for 1991, from DHAs and NHS Trusts. (ii) Figures for community psychiatric nurses, community midwives and "Other community nurses" in 1991 are affected by coding errors. The underlying figures should be broadly unchanged from 1990.

Unrestricted general practitioners, and practice nurses (whole-time equivalents), at 1 October, 1988-1992

	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992
Unrestricted GPs	3,221·0	3,260·0	3,223·0	3,177·0	3,186·0
Practice nurses	316·5	446·9	897·7	928·3	996·2

Notes: (i) Data are for the 12 complete FHSAs which fall wholly or partly within the London initiative zone (LIZ) (ii) Figures for unrestricted GPs may have been affected by the introduction of statutory retirement at the age of 70, as from 1 April 1991.

Management Executive (Rail Travel)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cost for each of the last three years of rail travel (a) in total and (b) to and from London for Leeds-based personnel of the NHS Management Executive.

Mr. Sackville: Information is not available in this form.

In 1991-92, before relocation, the National Health Service Management Executive spent a total of £577,000 on all travel and subsistence.

In 1992-93, when the executive was operating from Leeds and London, the spend was £1,374,000. The executive is now operating from Leeds and provisional figures show that £353,000 was spent on all travel and subsistence in the first three months of the current year.

The distribution of functions between the executive and the rest of the Department has varied from year to year and therefore expenditure between years is not directly comparable.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS Management Executive personnel based in Leeds have been provided with first-class rail season tickets to London; and what is the cost of those tickets in the current year.

Mr. Sackville: Three first-class season tickets have been provided at an estimated cost of £29,400.

Health Service Manpower

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she plans to publish her decision on manpower in relation to the NHS Management Executive and regional health authorities.

Mr. Sackville: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State asked a team to review the functions and manpower needed by the national health service above the level of local health care purchasers and providers. We hope to receive the team's advice shortly. It is too early to say what the implications of the review are, or over what time scale decisions might be taken.

Orthopaedic Surgeons

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has as to the ratios of specialist orthopaedic surgeon to head of population in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) all other EC countries.

Mr. Sackville: The available information is shown in the table. Information relating to Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. Equivalent information for other European Community countries is not available.

Hospital Orthopaedic surgeons England—30 September 1991

	Specialty: orthopaedic surgery	Population in '000s per doctor
Consultants	776	61·83
All doctors in Orthopaedic surgery (including consultants)	2,529	18·97

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals she has for increasing the number of specialist orthopaedic surgeons.

Mr. Sackville: We encourage an overall expansion of consultant numbers in order to improve patient care and this has included local central funding for the new deal and part-time consultant initiatives. The number of consultants appointed depends on the number of suitably qualified senior registrars available to fill the posts. In February this year the joint planning advisory committee accepted the trauma and orthopaedic specialty's advice on likely consultant opportunities and increased the quota for senior registrars from 181 to 210 posts. Consultant staffing in individual hospitals is a matter for local employing bodies, and they should have regard to competing priorities and available resources when assessing local staffing needs. Copies of the "Junior Doctors the New Deal" are available in the Library.

Pesticide Poisoning

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidelines have been issued by her Department to general practitioners concerning the identification of the symptoms, possible causes and treatment of cases of organophosphate poisoning;

(2) if she will place a copy of the updated version of "Pesticide Poisoning, Notes for the Guidance of Medical Practitioners", in the Library.

Mr. Sackville: Guidance on diagnosis and treatment of acute poisoning by organophosphate (OP) pesticides was included in the Department of Health book "Pesticide Poisoning: notes for the guidance of medical practitioners" which, at the time of publication, was provided to all doctors in general practice and to all hospital accident and emergency departments.

More recently, the Government's chief medical officers wrote in 1991 to all doctors in the United Kingdom about reporting of pesticide incidents and advised them that advice on poisoning was available from the Employment Medical Advisory Service and from the national poisons information service centres. Further advice on the subject by the Department of Health and the Veterinary Medicines Directorate is soon to be sent out to all general practitioners. A copy of the Department of Health handbook and the letter (PL/CMO(91)5) are available in the Library.

Health Technology

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the terms of reference of the NHS central research and development committee standing group on health technology.

Mr. Sackville: The terms of reference of the standing group on health technology assessment are as follows:

CENTRAL RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE (CRDC) STANDING GROUP ON HEALTH TECHNOLOGY. TERMS OF REFERENCE.

1. To advise on priorities for health technology assessment (HTA[1]), including
   - (i) studies involving the collection and analysis of new data;
   - (ii) reviews of such studies;
   - (iii) reports on the current state of the development, diffusion and likely impact of new technologies; and having regard to:

   - (a) the work of other Central Research and Development Committee (CRDC) advisory groups;
   - (b) the Government's health strategy and other policy priorities for the National Health Service;
   - (c) the likely benefits, risks, costs and broader impact of technologies;
   - (d) the stage of the technology's evolution and diffusion, and the likely impact of an assessment on practice;
   - (e) existing HTA findings both from work in the United Kingdom and from relevant work abroad;
   - (f) any specific issue(s) on which the CRDC may seek advice.
2. To advise on new technologies where, because of their potential risk, cost, ethical implications or other relevant factors, there is a particular need to control diffusion until more information is available.
3. To advise on priorities for research into methodologies of relevance to HTA, and in particular:
   - (i) methods of synthesising and reviewing existing data and findings;
   - (ii) experimental and non-experimental methods of assessing effectiveness;
   - (iii) economic evaluations;
   - (iv) strategies and methods for assessing emerging and developing technologies;
   - (v) methods which produce findings that are of relevance to as wide a range of settings as possible;
   - (vi) ways of evaluating the outputs, impact and cost-effectiveness of HTA.
4. To advise on training needs in respect of the conduct of high quality HTA.
5. (i) To produce an initial report on priorities for assessments of establishing technologies, focusing in particular on technologies of relevance to more than one disease or patient group;
   (ii) Thereafter, to advise on priorities in relation to new and emerging technologies.

[1]HTA is used here to refer to the assessment of the effectiveness, costs and broader impact of all procedures used by the health professionals to promote health, to prevent and treat disease, and to improve rehabilitation and long term care.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the budget of the NHS central research and development committee standing group on health technology.

Mr. Sackville: The work of the standing group is challenging, and widespread consultation with the national health service, the professions, the research community and industry are essential. It is not possible to include expertise in all areas in one group and the standing group will be underpinned by six advisory panels covering the acute sector; pharmaceuticals; population screening; primary and community care; diagnostics, imaging and monitoring; and methodologies. Funding of this scientific support will be around £150,000 in 1993-94.

The priorities for research identified by the standing group will be brought to the attention of all relevant research funding bodies. Allocations of central and NHS resources to health technology assessment (HTA) will reflect the central research and development committee's views of the importance of this task in relation to other priorities, but it is anticipated that around half of NHS direct support for research will, in time, be allocated to HTA.

Novel Surgical Procedures

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the research her Department and the Medical Research Council are funding into the cost effectiveness of novel surgical procedures.

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health has commissioned the following work into novel surgical procedures:

Economic evaluation of laser technology in medical care
(Brunel University—£106,648 between 1990 and 1992)
Neonatal extracorporeal membrane oxygenation: a multicentre randomised controlled trial
(National Perinatal Epidemiology Unit—£484,719 between 1992 and 1997)
Neonatal extracorporeal membrane oxygenation: a multicentre randomised controlled trial
(University of Leicester—£623,207 between 1992 and 1996)
A prospective cohort study to evaluate the long and medium term outcomes of transcervical ablation of the endometrium
(Brunel University—£425,000 between 1993 and 1999)

The Department of Health has identified minimal access therapy (MAT) as a high priority for research in its 1993-94 programme.

The Medical Research Council receives its grant-in-aid from my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

GP Fund Holders

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total amount that general practitioner fund holders in each region have saved in their staff and hospital referrals and drug budgets in 1991-92 in real terms and as a percentage of the total staff hospital referral and drug budget in that region.

Mr. Sackville: General practitioner fundholders do not have separate budgets for staff, hospital referrals and prescribing. Total savings in 1991-92 were 4 per cent. of budgets set.

Non-EC Doctors and Dentists

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what changes have been made to the 1985 circular HC FP(85)14 on the employment of doctors and dentists from non-EC countries in relation to permit-free training status for the purpose of postgraduate training in hospitals; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what instruction has been given to health authorities on whether work permits for doctors from non-EC countries should be issued for training grade posts after the expiry of the permit-free four-year period.

Mr. Sackville: No changes have been made to circular HC(FP)(85)14; nor have any instructions been given to health authorities in relation to the issue of work permits for training grade posts. Some parts of the guidance in HC(FP)(85)14 are under review, and will shortly be the subject of consultation with interested parties.

Cancer Vaccine

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what cancer vaccine treatment is currently available in the United Kingdom; and if she will list the locations.

Mr. Sackville: No cancer vaccine treatment is currently available.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research she is undertaking or promoting in respect of cancer vaccines.

Mr. Sackville: No research is currently being undertaken by the Department in respect of cancer vaccines. The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, and it is collaborating with leading cancer charities in this area.

Children's Rights Commissioner

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been undertaken by her Department into the feasibility of establishing the post of an independent Children's Rights Commissioner in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Bowis: None.

York Health District

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people aged (a) 65 to 74, (b) 75 to 84 and (c) over 84 years were discharged from a hospital in the former York health district in each of the last 10 years; and, of these people, what percentage were re-admitted to a hospital in the district for treatment (i) in the same specialty or (ii) in a different specialty within (1) one month, (2) three months and (3) six months of their previous discharge.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Bryan Askew, chairman of Yorkshire regional health authority, for details.

Medical Practitioners

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many newly qualified medical practitioners entered general practice in the United Kingdom in 1992.

Mr. Sackville: A total of 1,250 newly qualified medical practitioners entered general practice in England between 1 July 1991 and 30 June 1992. Information relating to Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

West Midlands Regional Health Authority

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations her Department has received concerning the decision of West Midlands regional health authority in 1990 to allow its software division employees to remain in the NHS pension scheme after their transfer to employment by the Health Management Trust-FIP Ltd.

Mr. Sackville: We are not aware that the Department has received any such representations.

Anabolic Steroids

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information her Department has published on the (a) known and (b) suspected side-effects of anabolic steroids;: and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Centre for Research into Drugs and Health Behaviour recently published the results of a Government-funded study of anabolic steroid use in Great Britain. A copy of the report, entitled "Anabolic Steroid Use in Great Britain—an exploratory investigation", will be placed in the Library. The aim of the study was to explore the extent of anabolic steroid use in gyms, but the report also includes data on effects reported by steroid users themselves.

Parkfield Sterile Supplies Unit

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to ensure that consultation takes place on the proposal to put the Parkfields sterile supplies unit in the west midlands out to tender.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for West Midlands regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Bryan Baker, the chairman of the health authority, for details.

Dental Practitioners

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will extend the use of the title "doctor" to include general dental practitioners and those employed in the community dental service.

Mr. Sackville: We have no present plans to do so.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the achievements of (a) her policies and (b) her Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if she will publish the performance indicators by which her Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Sackville: The Government continue to help small businesses, through improvements to the business climate, through deregulation and through specific programmes of support and assistance.

It continues to be the policy of the Department and the national health service to provide equal opportunities to all potential suppliers of whatever size, to trade on a value for money basis. This policy underpins all NHS and departmental contracts with suppliers. To help all businesses, a guide on how purchasing is now organised and who to contact, "Purchasing at NHS Supplies", has been published and widely distributed. A copy of the guide will be placed in the Library.

It is not practicable to monitor centrally the precise extent to which the NHS or the Department make use of small businesses. Similarly, it would not affect the way in which we purchase goods and services. Therefore no performance indicators on this subject are currently maintained.

Computer Consultancies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all the computer consultancies employed by her Department and agencies, since November 1991, the tasks for which they were engaged, and the total cost to her Department.

Mr. Sackville: The full information could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The total expenditure on information technology consultancy services by the Department in the years 1991-92 to 1992-93 was as follows:

	£ million
1991-92	12·495
1992-93	14·647

The services covered by this expenditure included advice on procurement and information strategies, the design, development and implementation of the office information system and user support services. Planned expenditure in 1993-94 is £13·661 million.

Nursing and Residential Homes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the number of (a) private nursing home beds and (b) residential home beds registered in England in total and by local authority each year since 1985; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Information about newly registered private nursing homes and residential care homes, including bed numbers, is not available centrally.

Speech Therapy

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received about the future funding of speech therapy training; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: We have received a number of such representations.

Blind and Partially Sighted People

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is her Department's policy on which information produced by her Department is published in alternative media to standard print such as Braille, tape or large print;

(2) what arrangements her Department makes to ensure that blind and partially sighted people have access to information produced by her Department where it has not been published in alternative media such as Braille, large print or tape.

Mr. Bowis: The Department aims to provide the general public with a wide range of information relating to legislation, policy, patients' rights and other health advice. A number of publications have already been produced for people who are visually impaired. Examples are shown as follows:

TITLE/TYPE OF PUBLICATION
Braille
Patients Charter (also available in audio cassette version).
NHS Reforms and You (also available in Moon and audio cassette versions).
Audio Cassette
Health of the Nation.
While You Are Pregnant—Safe Eating.
Elderly Health.
Community Care Changes in April 1993 (tapes are also available in ethnic minority languages).
Large Print
Keep Warm Keep Well (also available in audio cassette version).
Community Care changes in April 1993.

Moreover the citizens charter, which calls on public services to make sure information about services is easily accessible to all their users, is putting fresh emphasis on the need for effective communication with those who have special needs, including people who are visually impaired.

Mental Health

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what correspondence she has received from the National Schizophrenia Fellowship about the funding of respite services for people with a severe mental illness and their carers; and when she expects to reply.

Mr. Bowis: The Department has received and replied to several letters from the National Schizophrenia Fellowship about a whole range of issues concerning services for people with severe mental illness and their carers.

Fluoridation

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current recommended concentration of fluoride compound in drinking water; and what plans she has to revise this.

Mr. Sackville: The Government believe that fluoridation of water to a level of one milligram per litre is the optimal concentration for reducing teeth decay. There are no plans to revise this.

Degree Funding

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to alter the current arrangements for funding first degrees being undertaken by intending national health service employees; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Officials of the Department have held discussions with officials of the Department for Education about the arrangements for funding undergraduate courses in speech and language therapy, dietetics and chiropody. No decisions have yet been reached. Any proposals for change which may emerge from these discussions will be considered in consultations with the national health service, professional bodies and higher education institutions. There are no current plans to alter the present arrangements for the purchasing of education and training by regions for other professions employed in the NHS.

"The Health of the Nation"

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost of the "The Health of the Nation" anniversary events programme.

Mr. Sackville: Most of the publications and material produced during the first anniversary of Health of the Nation were fulfilling commitments set out in the White Paper or were an integral part of taking work on implementation forward. The exception was "CMO's Challenge", which was developed and launched as a specific initiative to take forward action on the findings of the first English health survey. The cost of "CMO's Challenge" was £15,000.

Tobacco

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she will publish the sixth annual report of the committee for monitoring agreements on tobacco advertising and sponsorship.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The committee for monitoring agreements on tobacco advertising and sponsorship has submitted its sixth report to the United Kingdom Health Ministers and to the Secretary of State for National Heritage. Copies have been placed in the Library. I am very grateful to the committee, and particularly the chairman, Sir John Blelloch, for their valuable work in continuing to monitor the agreements. The report shows that the industry has continued to honour its commitments.

Health Advisory Service

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the annual report of the NHS Health Advisory Service.

Mr. Bowis: The 1992-93 annual report of the National Health Service Health Advisory Service has been published today. Copies will be placed in the Library.

Junior Doctors

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to eliminate posts where junior doctors are contracted to work more than 83 hours per week.

Mr. Sackville: Regions have been advised that eliminating the few remaining posts where junior doctors and dentists are contracted for more than 83 hours per week is a priority. We shall be monitoring progress very closely.

Aycliffe Children's Home

Dr. Liam Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she will publish the report of the social services inspectorate's investigation of Durham county council's inquiries into allegations of injuries to children accommodated in Aycliffe children's home.

Mr. Bowis: We have today published this report. Copies will be placed in the Library. The report makes a number of recommendations about the management of Aycliffe and the care of the children which Durham county council will be addressing as a matter of urgency. The chief inspector of the social services inspectorate will monitor developments closely and give advice and guidance where appropriate.

Dental Instruments

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what new proposals she has to strengthen, or make mandatory, guidelines issued to dentists on sterilising dental instruments.

Mr. Sackville: The chief dental officer will shortly be issuing a further reminder to all dentists of the importance of adhering strictly to the recommended standards of cross-infection control.

Birth Defects

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the number and percentage of birth defects among live births in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Sackville: The information for 1982-91 (the latest year for which information is available) is shown in the table.

Number and percentage of birth defects among livebirths 1982-91 England and Wales

Year	Numbers[1]	Livebirths	Percentage

[1] The congenital malformation notification system is voluntary and is usually linked to the statutory system of birth notification to local health authorities which has existed since 1926. The local health authorities extract from the birth notifications details of babies born with malformations. This information is commonly supplemented with details obtained from midwives, hospitals, doctors and health visitors. The purpose of this system is primarily to detect changes in the frequency of reporting any particular malformation or group of malformations rather than trying to estimate prevalence at birth. Only malformations detected at or within 10 days of birth are currently included in the system, to ensure rapid reporting and thus fast detection of any increase in reporting levels. The system does however provide the most extensive data on prevalance levels available in England and Wales.

Prior to 1990 all malformations, however minor, were reportable to the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys (OPCS). In January 1990 an exclusion list was introduced describing the minor anomalies which should no longer be notified. Therefore data are not comparable for the period before 1990 and for 1990 onwards.

For more information on congenital malformations refer to OPCS publication, series MB3, copies of which are available in the Library.

Health Authority Expenditure

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total gross expenditure of each regional health authority in each of the last five years; and what is the projected expenditure for the next two years.

Mr. Sackville: Gross expenditure figures by regional health authority (RHA) for the financial years 1987-88 to 1991-92 are shown in the table. The 1991-92 figures are not comparable with those for earlier years and should be interpreted with caution. Simple comparisons between authorities is misleading because RHAs devolved their non-core functions at varying times and bore different costs on their regional budgets.

The 1992-93 figures will be available by December 1993. Figures are not available for future years.

Source: Annual accounts of regional health authorities. (Figures are not adjusted for inflation).

Notes to the table:

1. The figures for the years prior to 1991-92 vary between RHAs as regions were managed in an integrated way and the balance of management between RHAs and their respective district health authorities (DHAs) differed between regions. The figures were also affected by other factors including differences in the geographical size of regions, in the number of DHAs they included and in the extent to which RHAs directly managed operational services.
2. Following the implementation of the NHS reforms the role of RHAs is changing and this has a major impact on the figures for 1991-92. There are significant variations in the extent to which RHAs have retained or devolved management, support and operational services functions and in the extent to which their costs are borne or recharged to users. Some RHAs are directly involved in the purchaser function while the figures for others include additional significant costs—notably the payment of funds for nursing and other staff training to health providers.

Live Births

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, with reference to the tables published on pages 26 and 32-33 of HC 624, for what percentage of live births in 1990-91 the data for the maternity tail of the hospital episodes statistics were submitted from the South Western and West Midlands regional health authorities.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 20 July 1993]: Neither health authority submitted any of the additional data collected within the hospital episode statistics "maternity tail".

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Manufacturing Investment

Mr. Henderson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what new measures his Department proposes to stimulate increased levels of manufacturing investment in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sainsbury: Investment will be encouraged by the profitable and competitive manufacturing base which our policies are designed to ensure.

Creative Accounting

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has to make under which the sale of creative accounting schemes by auditors to their audit clients would become an offence.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have no plans to limit companies' freedom to seek accountancy advice.

A. F. Budge (Construction)

Mr. Hood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he or his Department have had with A. F. Budge (Construction).

Mr. Neil Hamilton: A. F. Budge (Contractors) Limited went into administrative receivership on 4 January 1993 and compulsory liquidation on 24 February of the same year. There are provisions requiring the receiver to make a note on the public record at Companies House and to advertise his appointment from which my department would become aware of the receivership.

Mr. Hood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he was informed of the receivership of A. F. Budge (Construction); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: A. F. Budge (Contractors) Limited went into administrative receivership on 4 January 1993 and compulsory liquidation on 24 February of the same year. I am not aware of any discussions between my department and the receivers or the company except matters relating to the administration of the insolvency proceedings.

Fossil Fuel Decarbonisation

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the research projects undertaken by his Department into fossil fuel decarbonisation schemes since April 1992; and what plans he has to develop fossil fuel decarbonisation demonstration projects.

Mr. McLoughlin: My Department is taking part with British Coal, and with support from National Power and PowerGen, in a study programme under the auspices of the International Energy Agency—the IEA greenhouse gases research and development programme—to evaluate the feasibility and costs of capture and safe disposal of carbon dioxide from large fossil fuel combustion plant. This began in 1991 and is due for completion in autumn, 1994. A total of thirteen countries, and the European Commission, are cooperating in this programme.

In addition, my Department is contributing to a complementary review, by the British Geological Survey and British Coal under the European Community's JOULE II research programme, of the scope for permanent, underground storage of carbon dioxide in Europe. This two-year review began in January 1993.

It would be premature to develop demonstration projects ahead of the completion of these initial feasibility studies.

British Standards

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to secure that any future revision of British standards include specific reference to the needs of disabled people.

Mr. McLoughlin: Any future revision of a British Standard is a matter primarily for the responsible Committee of the British Standards institution. The Institution is independent of Government.

I am advised that where appropriate the needs of disabled people are taken into account when British standards are prepared.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Pickles: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what will be the timing for changes he will be making to the assisted areas map; and what arrangements will be made for grant applications from businesses in areas which are to lose status caught up by those changes.

Mr. Sainsbury: The European Commission cleared yesterday the Government's proposals for the new assisted areas map of Great Britain. I have today signed the order to bring the new map into effect. It will be laid before Parliament today.

My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales and I have today written to all hon. Members to advise them of the changes. We have issued jointly a background document setting out the new map and explaining how the review of the map was conducted. Copies of this document are available in the Vote Office.

The new map will come into operation on 1 August. This allows nine days' notice so that businesses which have been engaged in pre-application discussions with departments under the various regional schemes will have an opportunity to complete formal application procedures before the changes take effect. Offers which have already been made will be honoured.

Oil and Gas Exploration

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to announce the next round of offshore licensing for oil and gas exploration.

Mr. Eggar: No decision has been taken yet as to whether or when there will be another round of offshore oil and gas licensing.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what steps he is taking to ensure that discharges of all oil contaminated cuttings from exploration and appraisal wells are prohibited in line with Her Majesty's Government's commitment at paragraph 28.1(iii) of the final declaration of the third international conference on the protection of the North sea; and by what date he expects the prohibition to take effect;

(2) by what date Her Majesty's Government expect to prohibit discharges of all oil contaminated cuttings in United Kingdom waters in line with their commitment at the third international conference on the protection of the North sea (paragraph 28.1(i) of the final declaration); and what steps he is taking to ensure this commitment is met.

Mr. Eggar: At the meeting of the Oslo and Paris Commissions on 22 September 1992, Ministers approved a PARCOM decision on the use of oil-based muds. This decision did not prohibit discharges of oil-contaminated cuttings, but set out definitions, rules and principles to avoid marine pollution from this source. The rules and principles state that the average oil content on cuttings discharged into the sea shall not exceed the target standard of an average 10 grammes of oil per kilogramme of dry cuttings. This standard is to be achieved as soon as possible and practicable and, in any event, have full effect for exploration and appraisal drilling no later than 31 December 1993 and for all wells no later than 31 December 1996.

Discharge of oil cuttings is an offence under section 3 of the Prevention of Oil Pollution Act 1971, unless an exemption from this provision has been granted under section 23. All exemptions are subject to conditions which require the operator to comply with the PARCOM decision, and to sample, analyse and report to the Department the oil content of the discharged cuttings.

Deregulation Unit

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which of the regulations governing environmental and pollution control the deregulation unit is examining.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: All regulations affecting business are being reviewed by the deregulation task forces and by Government Departments.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the members and advisers of the deregulation unit.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: There are 49 civil servants in the deregulation unit, including seven full-time secondees from the private sector. A list of the membership of the deregulation task forces is in the Library.

Radiocommunications Agency

Mr. Deva: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what targets he has set the Radiocommunications Agency for 1993-94.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have set the agency a range of key targets for 1993-94 which will appear in the agency's annual report for 1992-93. In addition to achieving an efficiency improvement of 4 per cent., it will also be required to meet the following quality of service targets covering its licensing work and enforcement activities:

Licensing

99 per cent. of new aeronautical and aircraft applicants and amendments to be processed within three working days;

90 per cent. of ships' radio licences to be issued within one month;

98 per cent. of maritime business radio cases to be processed within one month;

99 per cent. of new on-site paging applications and amendments to be processed and despatched within four working days;

90 per cent. of new private mobile radio applications and amendments that require no international co-ordination to be processed and despatched within 15 and 20 working days respectively.

Enforcement

100 per cent. of safety of life services complaints to be handled within 24 hours;

98 per cent. of business complaints to be handled within five working days; and

98 per cent. of domestic complaints to be handled within one month.

In addition, I have set the chief executive of the agency the personal target of replying within 10 working days to letters from Members of Parliament delegated to him for reply.

EC Directives

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the EC directives affecting British industry which have been implemented in the United Kingdom before the actual date on which they were required to take effect.

Mr. Needham: The detailed information requested can be obtained only at disproportionate cost. In general, EC directives are implemented on the actual date on which they are required to take effect.

EC Standards

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the effect on British manufacturing industry's investment planning of delays in agreeing EC standards.

Mr. Needham: No such estimate has been made by my Department. We are, however, concerned that the rate at which CEN and CENELEC produce the standards for use in relation to single market legislation is too slow and will be discussing with Community partners and national standards bodies what steps might be taken to improve the position. The Government are engaged in a review of future United Kingdom resourcing of the preparation of standards (Official Report, 10 June 1993, column 302) and welcome views on the best approach to the United Kingdom's input to European standards' committees.

Co-operative Projects

Mr. Purchase: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what projects have been funded since January 1990 under the arrangements, consequent to the winding up of the Co-operative Development Agency, for providing £200,000 a year for three years for innovative co-operative projects; if he will list the dates on which the funding commenced and the amount provided; and how many applications were rejected.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 19 July 1993]: The Government have contributed or committed in excess of £475,000 since January 1991 to fund 16 development projects to help improve the business performance and competitiveness of co-operative businesses. Twenty-eight proposals have not been supported. The list of supported projects is shown in the table.

Mr. Purchase: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has to continue funding innovative co-operative projects; and what sums are available in the current financial year.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 19 July 1993]: My Department is currently supporting a number of development projects relating to co-operative businesses and has already committed over £100,000 to these in the current financial year. We do not plan to make any further funding available specifically to support co-operative projects but will be assisting in their relationships with business links.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 22 July 1993]: The appointments of British Coal Corporation members are subject to the provisions of the Coal Industry Nationalisation (National Coal Board) Regulations 1946.

Regulation 3 in essence requires members

(a) to disclose to my right hon. Friend full particulars of any interest or securities held or acquired in any undertaking carrying on a business similar to that at any time carried on by the corporation; and

(b) to disclose at a meeting of the members of the corporation any direct or indirect interest in a contract made or proposed by the Corporation.

I have no present plans to revise those regulations.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 26 July 1993

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Judicial System (Probity)

Mr. Mates: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on his responsibilities in respect of the maintenance of the integrity and probity of the judicial system; and what role his Department plays in relation to allegations of bribery involving judges.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor regards integrity and probity as essential qualities for all those working in the judicial system. The investigation of allegations of bribery involving judges is a matter for the police. Consideration will also be given by the Lord Chancellor to any further action that may be required in the light of the results flowing from any such investigation.

Industrial Deafness

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) what steps he is taking to help victims of industrial deafness who are deterred from pursuing claims against their employers by the new regulations governing legal aid;

(2) what steps he is taking to help victims of industrial deafness to pursue their claims for compensation against their employers.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No separate assessment has been made of the effect of the legal aid eligibility changes on litigants with specific categories of case. However, the financial limits for personal injury actions remain higher than those for other categories of civil proceedings. The disposable income limit for personal injury cases is £7,500 (£6,800 for other proceedings) and the disposable capital limit is £8,560 (£6,750 for other proceedings).

No specific steps are proposed for the handling of industrial deafness cases, but they will benefit from a number of jurisdictional and procedural changes introduced for personal injury cases generally over the past two years. In the coming months the Lord Chancellor intends to issue a public consultation document setting out proposals for a less formal method than trial in open court for handling smaller personal injury claims. Depending on the financial limit set, a number of industrial deafness cases may benefit.

Vulnerable Witnesses

Dr. Godman: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department in how many cases defence counsel have objected to the use of video-link television equipment for the purpose of interviewing child witnesses and other vulnerable witnesses in each of the past three years; of these objections, how many were accepted by the court; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information sought by the hon. Member is not collected, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department in how many cases and in which courts video link television equipment has been used for the purpose of interviewing child witnesses and other vulnerable witnesses outwith the actual court room in each of the past four years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The number of cases in which child witnesses has given evidence via live television links at suitably equipped Crown court centres is set out in the table provided in answer to the hon. Member's previous question.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department in how many court cases a screen has been used in order to shield child witnesses from those being proceeded against in each of the past three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The hon. Member asked a similar question on 16 November last year, to which I gave an answer that the information was not collected. I am pleased to be able to report that from 1 January 1993 my Department introduced a mechanism for collecting this information in the Crown court. Since that date there have been 18 reported cases in which a screen has been used to shield a child witness in court.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many courts have video-link television equipment installed for the purpose of interviewing child witnesses and other vulnerable persons; where such courts are located; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Live television link equipment, for the purpose of children giving evidence under the provisions of section 32 Criminal Justice Act 1988, has been installed at the 47 Crown court centres listed in the table, which also provides the answer to the hon. Member's further question.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Benefits Agency

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Benefits Agency business plan for the current year was laid before Parliament.

Mr. Ancram: It is expected that the Social Security Agency's 1993-94 business plan will be published in August 1993. The agency's service and financial targets for the year have, however, already been set and are as follows. They are in line with the Government's policy of improving the service provided to customers and fully support the standards established in the Northern Ireland citizens charter. I am satisfied that the targets present a demanding challenge for the agency.

1. BENEFIT CLEARANCE TIMES (a)

	Per cent.	In days
Social fund crisis loans—on the day the need arises
Social fund community care grants	65	7
	95	20
Income support	71	5
	90	13
Sickness/invalidity benefit	65	10
	95	30
Child benefit	73	10
	95	30
Family credit	60	13
	95	42
Disability living allowance	65	30
	85	55
Retirement pension	65	20
	95	60
Unemployment benefit		7·5

2. BENEFIT ACCURACY
Income support: to pay the correct amount in at least 92 per cent. of cases. Sickness/invalidity benefit: to pay the correct amount in at least 97 per cent. of cases.
Family credit: to pay the correct amount in at least 92 per cent. of cases.
Disability living allowance: to pay the correct amount in at least 96 per cent. of cases.
Retirement pension: to pay the correct amount in at least 99 per cent. of cases.

3. CUSTOMERS SATISFACTION (b)
90 per cent. of customers to regard the agency's service as satisfactory or better.

4. FINANCIAL RECOVERY
Recovery of social fund loans—£16·1 million.
Recovery of income support overpayments—£1·2 million.
Recovery of centralised benefits overpayments—£0·18 million.
Benefit savings from detection and prevention of fraud—£10·8 million.
Increase number of contribution surveys to 6,000—including 1,400 employer educational visits.
Increase class 1 identified from survey—arrears and in-year savings—to £0·38 million.

5. RESOURCE MANAGEMENT
To live within a gross allocation of £28·5 million for social fund loans and community care grants.
To live within the agency's gross administration budget of £119·5 million, of which £113·6 million relates to running costs. A cash efficiency saving of £2·8 million—2·7 per cent. —has been deducted from the running costs—excluding Benefits Agency work.

Notes:
(a). Clearance times normally cover the period from the date of receipt of the claim in the agency to the formal decision by the adjudication officer or equivalent. Notification of the result is normally issued the following day. All days refer to working days.
(b) The customer satisfaction target covers a two-year period and will be measured by an independent survey in 1994-95.

Hospital Opthalmic Departments

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what guidelines are given to health and social services boards for keeping and collating statistics in hospital ophthalmic departments; and what data from hospital ophthalmic departments boards are required to collate.

Mr. Ancram: The same data are collected for the specialty of ophthalmology as for all other hospital specialties. Details of the forms and how to complete them are given in the guidance manual for Korner central requirements for hospital services. This is supported by a data dictionary which lists the standard definitions to be used throughout Northern Ireland. In addition, anonymised records of patients' diagnoses and any operative procedures carried out are also collected for analysis centrally.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average cost of a visit to a hospital ophthalmic out-patient department.

Mr. Ancram: This information is not available at present.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many referrals from general practitioners and optometrists to hospital ophthalmology out-patients clinics there have been since 1985.

Mr. Ancram: This information is not available in the form requested. The total number of referrals to hospital ophthalmology out-patient clinics in Northern Ireland since 1985 is as follows:

Year	Number
1985	19,268
1986	19,449
1987	18,786
1988-89	18,306
1989-90	19,106
1990-91	19,872
1991-92	20,668
1992-93	21,832

Director of Public Health

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if the Eastern Health and social services board intends to re-advertise the post of director of public health;

(2) when the Eastern health and social services board expects a permanent director of public health to take up the post.

Mr. Ancram: The vacant post of director of public health, Eastern health and social services board, was advertised in March 1993. A number of candidates were shortlisted for the post, but following interviews the board did not make an appointment.

The board intends to readvertise the post and, in the meantime, an effective acting-up arrangement is in place.

Armagh Health Centre

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans there are to sell the health centre in Armagh; what plans he has for the property to be advertised for sale to the public; and if he will make a statement on the procedures which apply to the sale of publicly owned properties.

Mr. Ancram: The general medical practitioners working in Armagh health centre have expressed an interest in buying the premises. The proposal is being considered by the Southern health and social services board and is subject to approval by the Department of Health and Social Services. If the proposal is approved the premises would be sold at a price advised by the district valuer.

A sale in these circumstances would result in a change of ownership but a continuation of the general medical services currently provided from the health centre. The sale would not therefore be advertised on the open market, nor would it be subject to the normal policy and procedural guidelines for dealing with the disposal of surplus Government land which are contained in DOE (NI) lands service circular No. LSC/1/91. A copy of the said circular has been placed in the Library.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Atkins: The Government continue to place a high priority on helping small businesses in Northern Ireland, through improvements to the business climate, through deregulation and through specific programmes of support and assistance. Economic development strategy focuses on assisting companies to develop their growth potential and competitiveness and is implemented through the Industrial Development Board (IDB) and the Local Enterprise Development Unit (LEDU)

Each year, IDB and LEDU set challenging targets and measure performance against both these and performance in the previous year.

LEDU had a successful year in 1992-93 with a significant rise in activity levels across its range of programmes, including 3,716 individuals receiving enterprise training against a target of 3,000, and 1,429 new business start-ups against a target of 1,215.

During 1992-93 there was a net increase of employment of 1,020 in LEDU client companies; this represents a significant reversal of the previous years results which showed a net decrease in employment of 650.

Overall, 1992-93 was also a year of substantial achievement for the IDB when viewed against a background of recession at home and overseas. It was a successful year for inward investment, with 10 projects offering almost 2,000 new jobs having been attracted to Northern Ireland. Companies already based in Northern Ireland, many of them employing fewer than 200 people, have been winning business in the highly competitive international marketplace. Achieving and maintaining international competitiveness is promoted by the IDB as the most important objective which companies should strive towards if they are to survive and grow.

Industrial Development Board

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps the IDB has taken following the report by the Comptroller and Auditor General for Northern Ireland into the selective financial assistance criteria employed by the IDB to improve the assessment of the employment potential of projects.

Mr. Atkins: The Comptroller and Auditor General for Northern Ireland reported to the House of Commons earlier this year on the application by the Industrial Development Board of its selective financial assistance criteria. This report was the basis of an examination by the Committee of Public Accounts which published its report, containing a number of recommendations, on 22 July 1993. A formal memorandum of reply to the Committee's report will be issued by the Department of Finance and Personnel in early autumn.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the implementation of the Industrial Development Board's forward strategy for 1991 to 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The Industrial Development Board has reported on the implementation of forward strategy in its annual reports for 1990-91 and 1991-92. A further update will be given in the report of 1992-93 to appear in the autumn. IDB officials report to me on their activities and I have regular meetings with the board's chairman. The board's activities are subject to regular policy evaluation and review.

Housing

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what comparative assessments have been made between housing associations and the Housing Executive with regard to the value for money in the administration, management and development costs of the different organisations.

Mr. Atkins: It is not possible to draw meaningful comparisons of relative value for money between the Housing Executive and housing associations because of the differences in the scale of their operations, in the housing needs which they seek to meet and in age and type of their housing stock. However, work is continuing to develop valid comparisons of management, maintenance and capital costs. A recent assessment of the value for money in new housing schemes confirms that in general both the Housing Executive and housing associations provide value for money.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what provision for move-on accommodation has been made by the Housing Executive for the years 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96.

Mr. Atkins: I have been advised by the chairman of the Housing Executive that it does not make specific provision for move-on accommodation.

The executive does however provide financial assistance to a number of voluntary agencies working in the homelessness field which provide counselling and resettlement programmes as part of their overall accommodation service. This assistance will amount to approximately £350,000 in 1993-94.

Selective Financial Assistance

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what amounts of selective financial assistance were allocated to industrial enterprises in the constituency of South Down from 1 April 1981 to 31 March 1992; and what were the total amounts of selective financial assistance allocated in each year in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: Information on selective financial assistance offers made by the Industrial Development Board to companies in the South Down constituency is available only from 1 September 1982, when the board was set up. Information on selective financial assistance offers made by the Local Enterprise Development Unit is available only by district council area.

The table sets out the information available.

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all those services or functions contracted out in his Department and agencies, since November 1991, in which the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were not applied.

Mr. Atkins: Whether or not the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations apply in any particular case will depend on the nature of the work awarded and the contractors' own proposals for carrying it out. The services or functions which have been contracted out in Northern Ireland Departments and the Northern Ireland Office and their agencies, since November 1991, and in which the regulations were not applied, are as follows:

Building maintenance Catering
Cleaning
Computer system
Courier system
Data processing
Facilities management
Grounds maintenance
Gully emptying
IT products and services
Messengers/porterage
Painting and decorating
Receptionists/telephonists
Roads reinstatement

Sewer maintenance
Sludge tankering

Renewable Energy

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will publish details of activity in Northern Ireland designed to promote renewable energy sources;

(2) if he will make an announcement on future non-fossil fuel obligation policy for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: A study, jointly commissioned by Northern Ireland Electricity plc (NIE) and the Department of Economic Development, into the potential for renewable energy has concluded that there are a number of promising renewable technologies for commercial development in Northern Ireland.

On the basis of the study's findings, and having regard to the Government's commitment to the promotion of commercially viable renewable technologies, I intend to make a non-fossil fuel obligation order next year under article 35 of the Electricity (Northern Ireland) Order 1992, requiring NIE to secure the availability of up to 15 MW of power from renewable sources. The size of the order and the technologies included within it, will be determined by the bids received by NIE, having regard to the need for diversity of technologies and the impact on costs to electricity consumers.

Accordingly, NIE will today be inviting bids from developers and will be announcing details of the arrangements for the processing of such bids.

I envisage further non-fossil fuel obligation orders being made in future years with the aim of achieving a target of about 45 MW of renewable plant in Northern Ireland by the year 2005.

Disability Allowances (Women)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many women who qualify for severe disablement allowance and invalid care allowance will receive their full entitlement following the decision of the European Court of Justice on 30 March in case C328/91; when they will receive payments; if the payment of arrears will extend beyond 12 months from the date of claim; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Alec Wylie. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. Wylie to Dr. Norman A. Godman, dated 22 July 1993:

As I am responsible for Social Security operational matters, your recent Parliamentary Question about the effect of the European Court of Justice decision in case C328/91 as regards the entitlement of women to Severe Disablement Allowance (SDA) and Invalid Care Allowance (ICA) has been passed to me for reply.

Information about the number of women whose entitlement to these benefits falls within the scope of this decision is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. However, all such claims received after August 1988 have been adjudicated on and, where appropriate, payment made in accordance with normal rules and time limits. A decision regarding the payment of arrears beyond the normal time limit of 12 months is still awaited in separate cases currently before the European Court.

I hope this is helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the official report and copies will be placed in the Library.

Paediatrics

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many vacant posts of consultant paediatricians and senior registrars specialising in paediatrics have been notified in each of the past five years; on average how long it takes to fill such posts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The information is as follows, at September in each year:

Vacant posts

On average, from notification of vacancies, it takes three months to advertise and select successful candidates.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many consultant paediatricians and senior registrars are currently in post.

Mr. Ancram: There are currently 26 consultant paediatricians and 11 senior registrars employed in the health and personal social services in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) consultant paediatricians and (b) senior registrars currently employed were trained in (i) Northern Ireland, (ii) elsewhere in the United Kingdom, (iii) other European Community countries and (iv) countries outwith the EC.

Mr. Ancram: The information sought is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Concessionary Travel

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has concerning the denial of concessionary travel privileges and related concessions to those persons aged 60 years or more who are in receipt of invalidity benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The concessionary fare scheme, which is administered by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland, is not linked to the receipt of invalidity benefit.

Inward Investment

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many recorded visits were made by industrialists in connection with potential inward investment to each district council area in Northern Ireland from 1 April 1992 to 31 March 1993; and of these how many were repeat visits.

Mr. Atkins: Details of recorded first and repeat visits by industrialists to each district council area in Northern Ireland are set out in the table.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Asil Nadir

Mr. Mates: To ask the Attorney-General, (1) pursuant to his oral statement of 30 June, Official Report, column 967, when he concluded that there was no credible evidence implicating the judge in the case of Regina v. Nadir and Turner in a conspiracy;

(2) when he expects the police investigation under the direction of the Director of Public Prosecutions into the alleged conspiracy to bribe Mr. Justice Tucker to be completed; and if he will make a statement;

(3) when he first learned of the allegation that the judge in the case of Regina v. Nadir and Turner was involved in a conspiracy to pervert the course of justice;

(4) when he reviewed the evidence relating to allegations of involvement by the judges in the case of Regina v. Nadir and Turner in a conspiracy to pervert the course of justice.

The Attorney-General: The director of the Serious Fraud Office was informed on 1 October 1992 that the Metropolitan police had commenced an investigation into an alleged plot to bribe the trial judge in the Polly Peck case. I was informed of the position during the week commencing 5 October. The investigation continues and its management is an operational matter for the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis. I cannot say when it will be completed.

The evidence gathered during the investigation will be submitted to the Crown Prosecution Service at its conclusion. The information that no credible evidence had been revealed implicating the judge was confirmed in response to a specific inquiry initiated by me to the Director of Public Prosecutions in the light of speculation and concern caused by the statement made by the hon. Member himself on 29 June.

Jason Georgiou

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the previous convictions of Paul Smith, a prosecution witness in the case of Jason Georgiou; and in how many other cases he has been a prosecution witness.

The Attorney-General: No. Background information of this nature relating to prosecution witnesses is provided to the Crown Prosecution Service solely for use in the course of criminal proceedings.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Attorney-General if he will outline the evidence which led the Crown Prosecution Service to charge Jason Georgiou with conspiracy to murder; and why the case was dropped.

The Attorney-General: No. It is my practice not to give detailed reasons in relation to decisions to prosecute. The Crown Prosecution Service was satisfied that the evidence available at the outset of proceedings was sufficient to provide a realistic prospect of conviction.

The case against Jason Georgiou and three of his co-defendants was dropped because the principal prosecution witness proved unwilling to give evidence at the trial.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

World Bank

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of the British contribution to the World Bank group is used (a) for projects that directly benefit the poorest people in developing countries and (b) to help to meet the goals established at the world summit for children.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: United Kingdom contributions are used to support the overall operations of the World bank. The proportion which can be attributed to projects of this kind cannot readily be estimated.

World bank lending for human resources development has increased almost fivefold since the early 1980s to 14 per cent. of total lending in fiscal years 1990-92, and in particular is focusing on basic social services, including primary health care and education. In fiscal year 1992, the bank estimates that 14 per cent. of new lending was for projects targeted at the poor. A second, equally important, component of the bank's poverty reduction strategy is the promotion of broadly-based economic growth which generates income-earning opportunities for the poor.

European Bank for Reconstruction and Development

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what opinions have been expressed by the Government to senior officials of the European bank for reconstruction and development on the bank's financial problems.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In discussion with the EBRD senior officials and fellow members, we have consistently emphasised that the bank—like any other public sector organisation—has a duty to use the tax payer's resources as cost effectively as possible. We have welcomed the findings of the recently published report of the bank's audit committee, which makes a number of proposals to strengthen financial procedures and controls. The bank's financial position remains strong—it made a small operating profit in 1992.

Structural Adjustment Programmes

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 1 March, Official Report, column 23, what is the proportion of total United Kingdom aid which goes to each of the countries which are currently implementing a World bank or International Monetary Fund structural adjustment programme.

Mr. Lennox Boyd: The information requested for the countries listed in my earlier answer is contained in the table.

United Kingdom bilateral aid in 1991-92 to countries implementing IMF/World Bank—supported adjustment programmes.

Russia

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of aid to Russia goes in the form of British manufactured goods and how much in direct cash payments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We make no direct cash payments to Russia under the British bilateral aid programme; nor do we deliver aid in the form of British manufactured goods. The know-how fund transfers key British skills through technical co-operation projects.

Development Institutions

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will provide a table setting out, for each year since 1982, the total contribution made by Her Majesty's Government to each of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the International Development Association, the International Finance Corporation, the Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency, the International Monetary Fund, the Inter-American Development bank, the African Development bank and the Asian Development bank; and, in each case, what Her Majesty's Government's contribution represents as a percentage of the annual income and expenditure of each institution.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The table sets out United Kingdom contributions to each of the institutions. United Kingdom shareholdings in most of the institutions are determined at the time of periodic capital increases or of replenishments of concessional funds. In the case of the International Monetary Fund, the United Kingdom's stakeholding is determined by its quota, which is effectively a loan remunerated at a market-related interest rate. Multilateral development bank operations are funded mainly by borrowings on the international capital markets. Expressing contributions as a percentage of annual income and expenditure is of marginal utility, therefore, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

   In common with other members, the United Kingdom's principal contribution to the IMF is in the form of a loan, the "quota", on which is paid a market-related rate of interest. As part of the 1983 general quota increase, the United Kingdom increased its loan by SDR 1,806·5 million. As part of the 1992 general quota increase, the United Kingdom increased its loan by a further SDR 1,220·6 million. At the current rate of exchange between the £ and SDR, these amounts are equivalent to approximately £1·7 billion and £1·1 billion respectively.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will estimate the savings obtainable if all drugs were prescribed generically.

Mr. Sackville: An estimate, based on prescribing statistics for 1992 in England, suggests that savings of up to £80 million could have been achieved if all drugs which could have been dispensed in the generic form had been prescribed generically.

Psychiatric Care

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) woman, (b) men and (c) people from an ethnic minority were sectioned by section, under the mental Health Acts; and how many admissions there have been in each of the last five years.

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally. Information on the number of admissions by gender and sections of the 1983 Mental Health Acts and other Acts is shown in the table.

Novel Surgical Procedures

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what account will be taken in the budget of the NHS central research and development committee standing group on health technology of its new function in reviewing and regulating novel surgical procedures.

Mr. Sackville: Following the Advisory Council on Science and Technology report on medical research and health, the central research and development committee standing group on health technology has been asked to advise on a strategy to achieve appropriate control and monitoring of new surgical procedures, taking account of the roles and responsibilities of health professionals, their professional bodies, and local and central management in the reformed national health service. Until a mechanism is identified and agreed, it is not possible to estimate the resources that may be required to support the work of the steering group and its advisory panels or to fund the research it recommends.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what powers the NHS central research and development committee standing group on health technology will have to control the introduction and dissemination of novel surgical procedures.

Mr. Sackville: The standing group on health technology will advise on new technologies where, because of their potential risk, cost, ethical implications or other relevant factors, there is a particular need to control diffusion until more information is available. The management executive of the national health service is currently considering how diffusion of such technologies can best be controlled. Following the Advisory Council on Science and Technology report on medical research and health, the central research and development committee standing group on health technology has been asked to advise on a strategy to achieve appropriate control and monitoring of new surgical procedures, taking account of the roles and responsibilities of health professionals, their professional bodies, and local and central management in the reformed NHS.

1989	22,940
1990	23,770
1991	23,040

London Family Health Service Authorities

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the allocations for staff premises and computing for each family health services authority in the area covered by the London implementation group for 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available centrally. Allocations for staff, premises and computing for individual family health services authorities within the London initiative zone are determined by the relevant regional health authority in accordance with its assessment of local needs and priorities.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the total development moneys allocated for 1992 and 1993-94 to each FHSA covered by the London implementation group and provided for in "Making London Better".

Mr. Sackville: Allocations of development monies to family health services authorities are determined by the regional health authorities in accordance with their assessment of priorities for the improvement of primary health care services.

Qa Business Services

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if her Department was consulted by West Midlands regional health authority in 1989 on (a) the content of the Wraith and Casey market research report into the potential west midlands customer base for Qa Business Services and (b) the West Midlands regional health authority's own estimates of potential redundancies in the management services division consequent upon its privatisation.

Mr. Sackville: We are not aware that any such consultation took place.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what further consideration her Department will give to making available financial assistance to the ex-employees of Qa Business Services on the lines of those given to civil servants transferred to TICC Ltd. on the privatisation of the Skills Training Agency;

(2) what representations her Department has received regarding the announcement by West Midlands regional health authority on 15 July that it had no legal or moral responsibility to provide financial compensation to the ex-employees of Qa Business Services; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We regret that individuals have experienced financial loss following the collapse of Qa Business Services Ltd. in 1991. West Midlands regional health authority has examined the issue carefully; they have met with a group of former Qa employees on several occasions and invited them to submit any information they held which could substantiate a claim for compensation. After a full and exhaustive review of this evidence, West Midlands regional health authority concluded on the 15 July 1993 that, on present evidence, there was insufficient grounds for the regional health authority to accept responsibility for making compensatory payments. We have been kept fully informed on this issue and on the basis of the evidence available to us at this time we have accepted the region's conclusion. We have recieved no representations on this issue since 15 July.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information her Department held on the future commercial viability of Qa Business Services when it announced that Qa Business Services had been given the waiting list initiative contract on 27 February 1991.

Mr. Sackville: This contract was awarded to Qa Business Services on the basis of its previous work for the Department on the management of waiting lists.

West Midlands RHA

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations her Department received from the legal department of West Midlands regional health authority in November 1991 concerning the sale of the regional health authority's management services division.

Mr. Sackville: We are not aware that the Department received any such representations in November 1991.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information her Department has on whether the actions and decisions taken by West Midlands regional health authority officers in pursuit of the privatisation of the regional health authority's management services division were fully documented; and whether proper reporting procedures were fully adhered to.

Mr. Sackville: Information of this nature is provided through the statutory audit process. The management buy-out of the region's management information services division was covered in the district auditor's report of 15 April 1993. A copy of this report was sent to the Department.

Diabetic Eye Disease

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy that all diabetics are screened annually for diabetic eye disease.

Mr. Sackville: Since 1 July this year general practitioners will receive separate fixed payments for organising a programme of chronic disease management either for diabetes or asthma. Practices choosing to participate are required to ensure that on initial diagnosis and at least annually a full review of the patient's health is carried out including checks for potential complications. A joint Department of Health/British Diabetic Association task force on diabetes has been established to consider all aspects of the St. Vincent recommendations and will be considering what, if any, further advice should be offered on screening for diabetic retinopathy.

Staff Pensions

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what specific guidance her Department issues to regional and district health authorities on the protection of pension rights of staff transferred to employment in the private sector; and whether such guidance includes reference to the consideration of the consequences upon newly founded company pension schemes of the early collapse of companies.

Mr. Sackville: Advice has been issued to all national health service employers about overall terms and conditions of employment, including pensions, when an undertaking is transferred. NHS employers are also asked to issue to all staff leaving the NHS pension scheme, a leaflet which explains the pensions options open to them. This leaflet advises staff to think carefully before making any decision affecting their pension rights and, if unsure, to seek independent financial advice. A copy of "NHS Pension Scheme—Leaving the Scheme" will be placed in the Library.

Children's Homes

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to publish new guidelines concerning the management of difficult children in residential care homes.

Mr. Bowis: On 28 April 1993 the Department published guidance on permissible forms of control in children's residential care, which is available in the Library. In addition, we have commissioned the Open university to produce a catalogue of training material for staff who have to deal with difficult adolescents.

Hearing Aids

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hearing aids were supplied (a) by the NHS and (b) privately in each year for the past 10 years (i) in total and (ii) to people aged over 64 years.

Mr. Bowis: The number of hearing aids issued to national health service hearing aid centres since 1984 is shown in the table. No data are available prior to 1984 or on private provision.

Number of hearing aids issued to NHS hearing aid centres 1984-93

1985-86	595,676

Counterfeit Medicines

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information her Department has concerning (a) the current state of progress of the proposed EC directive on the distance selling of medicines and (b) the extent of the trade in the United Kingdom and the EC in counterfeit and reimported medicines.

Mr. Sackville: A European Commission proposal for a directive on distance selling is under discussion in Brussels. A first reading of the Commission's proposal has been completed. The European Parliament has recently submitted its opinion on the proposal. The Commission is now revising the text of the proposal to take account of that opinion and of the views of member states. It is expected the discussions of the revised text will begin in Brussels in September.

There has been one instance of a fake medicinal product in the last 12 months in the United Kingdom which was intercepted before it reached the public. Records are not maintained of medicinal products legitimately reimported.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health where the counterfeit medicines discovered in the United Kingdom during the last three years were produced.

Mr. Sackville: Three instances of fake medicines have been discovered in the last three years. Production sources were never proven but investigators believed that the products came from a variety of sources.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures her Department is taking to ensure that counterfeit and copycat versions of British medicines illicitly produced in Northern Cyprus are not reaching the NHS market.

Mr. Sackville: Any report of alleged counterfeit or copycat version of British medicines illicitly produced in northern Cyprus reaching the national health service market would be immediately investigated by the Medicines Control Agency. In addition, the agency undertakes regular inspections of wholesale distribution and independently samples a range of products available to the public. Both inspection and sampling procedures include mechanisms to identify possible suspect products.

Mr. Dalyell: The ask the Secretary of State for Health what support the United Kingdom Government have given to the World Health Organisation campaign against counterfeit medicines.

Mr. Sackville: The United Kingdom Government are in regular contact with World Health Organisation (WHO) and actively support its campaign against counterfeit medicines. The United Kingdom has been at the forefront in assisting WHO with the development of a unified scheme for the certification of medicinal products which are traded internationally. The Medicines Control Agency shares with WHO its own experiences and strategies gained from investigations into counterfeit medicines.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all those services or functions contracted out in her Department and agencies, since November 1991, in which the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were not applied.

Mr. Sackville: Whether or not the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations (TUPE) applies in any particular case will depend on the specification for the work to be carried out and the contractor's own proposals for meeting the specification. Since November 1991, the following services and functions have been contracted out as a result of market testing, and have not been affected by TUPE:

Department of Health
Office and building services, Quarry house
Catering and building services, Skipton house
The health survey for England

National Health Service Estates Agency
Clerical and secretarial support services

Geriatric Beds

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the number of long-stay geriatric beds in England in total and by health authority each year from 1985; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Information collected by the Department on numbers of geriatric beds does not separately identify those used for continuing care.

Racial Discrimination

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS employees or applicants for employment have won actions or had their actions settled in their favour for racial discrimination in selection or dismissal in the NHS in each of the last five years; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

NHS Trusts Federation

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money the NHS Trusts Federation receives (a) from her Department and (b) from NHS trusts.

Mr. Sackville: The National Health Service Trusts Federation does not receive funding from the Department. Subscriptions from NHS trusts are a matter for the NHS Trusts Federation.

Water Disconnections

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies she has commissioned into the health consequences for families of having their water supplies disconnected; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Surgical Operations

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of surgical operations were carried out outside normal working hours in each of the last five years.

1987-88	16·3
1988-89	16·2

Young People

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many complaints have been made by or on behalf of children and young people under the provision of the National Health Service (Service Committees and Tribunals) Regulations 1974 in each year since 1985.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many complaints from children have been received to date by each social services department in England under section 26 of the Children Act 1989.

Mr. Bowis: The first report to Parliament of the working of the Children Act 1989, a copy of which is available in the Library shows that, at 30 June 1992, 3,810 complaints in total had been received of which 542 were from children. Information is not available centrally by local authority.

Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have been identified as having contracted Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease according to the most recently available figures; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Figures are contained in the second annual report on Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease (CJD) in the United Kingdom produced by Dr. R. G. Will and colleagues from the national CJD surveillance unit, Edinburgh. The table shows definite and probable cases of CJD notified to the unit during the first three years of the prospective study:

Definite and probable cases of CJD in the United Kingdom

	Number
1 May 1990 to 30 April 1991	32
1 May 1991 to 30 April 1992	37
1 May 1992 to 30 April 1993	48

The figures for 1990-91 and 1991-92 update those in the first annual report.

Although there has been a rise in the annual incidence of cases of CJD notified to the unit, the report concludes that this is not statistically significant and is likely to be related to increased ascertainment of cases. The report also confirms that there has been no significant change in the epidemiological or clinical characteristics of CJD since the occurrence of bovine spongiform encephalopathy (BSE). A preliminary analysis of dietary history provides no convincing evidence of an increase in incidence of CJD in relation to possible dietary exposure to BSE. It will, however, be necessary to continue the study into the incidence of CJD for a decade or more to detect any change in the pattern of the disease.

Copies of the report have been placed in the Library.

Anthrax Vaccine

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many locations are licensed for the (a) manufacture and (b) storage of anthrax vaccine.

Mr. Sackville: Two sites in England are licensed for the manufacture of anthrax vaccine and five sites for its storage.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research she has commenced into side effects of the administration of (a) anthrax vaccine and (b) penicillin-resistant anthrax vaccine; and what were the results.

Mr. Sackville: Anthrax vaccine is a licensed product in accordance with the Medicines Act 1968. As with all licensed medicinal products, administering physicians are expected to report all serious suspected adverse reactions to the Committee on the Safety of Medicines, using the "yellow card" system. Such reports are carefully scrutinised and followed up where necessary. Penicillin resistance or sensitivity of an infecting organism is not related to vaccine composition.

Centre for Applied Microbiological Research

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will place in the Library the corporate and business plans for the special health authority covering the Centre for Applied Microbiological Research;

(2) if she will place in the Library the accounts and corporate plans of the Centre for Applied Microbiological Research for the last three years and the current corporate plan, indicating if they are separate plans and reports or incorporated within the Public Health Laboratory Service reports;

(3) if she will list the chair and members of the special health authority covering the Centre for Applied Microbiological Research, together with their salaries, and other remuneration and their other present or previous occupations and employment;

(4) what resources are allocated to the Centre for Applied Microbiological Research in 1993-94; and what resources were allocated to it as part of the Public Health Laboratory Service in 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Sackville: The centre remains part of the Public Health Laboratory Service board (PHLSB) until its functions are transferred to a new body: it is likely that this will not be until after the end of this financial year. It obtains resources from a variety of sources, including sales of products under a distributorship and marketing agreement with Porton Products Ltd., contracts with other commercial companies and public sector bodies, and funding through the PHLSB for work undertaken for the board. It has not in the past published its own corporate plan, although it is referred to within the plans produced by the PHLSB. No chairman or members of a new authority have yet been appointed. However Mr. J. E. Everitt, at present chairman and chief executive of Vickers Medical, is acting as chairman-designate to steer the establishment of the new body.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many employees there are at the Centre for Applied Microbiological Research currently; and what were the figures for 1 April of each year since 1990.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is:

Year	Number
1 April 1990	461
1 April 1991	440
1 April 1992	467
1 April 1993	457
1 July 1993	459

Porton International

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the agreement between the Government and Porton International comes to an end; and what was the revenue to her Department arising from the agreement in each of the last three financial years.

Mr. Sackville: The distributorship and marketing agreement between Porton Products Ltd. and the Public Health Laboratory Services board (PHLSB) can be terminated by either side in October 1998. The revenue arising to the PHLSB from the agreement was £3·7 million in 1990-91, £6·8 million in 1991-92 and £6·9 million in 1992-93.

NHS Trust Directors (Political Affiliations)

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are her guidelines to regional health authorities and NHS trust chairpersons on vetting applications for NHS trust directors with respect to political party affiliation.

Mr. Sackville: My hon. Friend the Minister of Health has written to regional health authority chairmen seeking their recommendations for appointment of national health service trust non-executive directors, and providing guidance on the criteria to be followed. This guidance does not cover the issue of political affiliation: we do not seek information on this. People are appointed to health authorities and trusts for their personal qualities, and for the skills they bring to the management and strategic direction of the NHS trust. Copies of the guidance will be placed in the Library.

Nursing Education

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the responsibilities of regional health authorities for funding nurse education; and what monitoring is given to the discharge of these responsibilities.

Mr. Sackville: Regions use top-sliced funds to purchase the training places required by employers to ensure the number of qualified staff matches the demand employers identify. Regular monitoring is carried out through the national health service management executive.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the ring-fenced money allocated to regional health authorities to provide nurse pre-registration courses has actually been used for this purpose; and to what use any not so used has been put.

Mr. Sackville: In 1992-93, all the money allocated for pre-registration nurse training was used as intended.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nursing students there were in each of the four Thames regions, in the years 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Sackville: The figures show that the number of nursing students in each of the Thames regions as at 31 March 1990, 1991 and 1992.

North East Thames	6,030	5,730	6,310
North West Thames	3,940	3,740	4,150
South East Thames	4,170	4,300	4,460
South West Thames	2,830	2,740	2,810

Notes:
(1) The figures include those in pre-registration nursing, district nursing and district enrolled nursing courses.
(2) All figures are rounded to the nearest 10.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many students are projected to enter nursing education in each of the four Thames regions in the years 1993, 1994 and 1995.

Mr. Sackville: The four Thames regions will commission 5,767 training places for nursing in 1993-94. Information is not available centrally for projections to be made for 1994-95 and 1995-96.

Paediatrics

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many consultant paediatricians and senior registrars specialising in paediatrics are in post on a full-time equivalent in England and Wales.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) consultant paediatricians and (b) senior registrars specialising in paediatrics currently employed in England and Wales were trained in (i) the United Kingdom, (ii) other European Community countries and (iii) countries outwith the EC.

Mr. Sackville: The available information is shown in the table.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many vacant posts of consultant paediatricians and senior registrars specialising in paediatrics have been notified in each of the past five years; on average how long it takes to fill such posts; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The available information is shown in the table.

1. Data on time to fill such posts are not available.
2. Paediatrics is known to be a shortage specialty and the number of senior registrar posts is being increased.

General Practitioners (Drug Prescribing)

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table setting out the total of the amount by which general practitioners' expenditure on prescribed drugs exceeded indicative limits in each year since 1990.

Mr. Sackville: The indicative prescribing scheme started in April 1991, therefore figures for 1990-91 are not available. Information for 1991-92 and 1992-93 is shown in the table.

	1991-92 £	1992-93 £
Indicative amount	2,231,489,967	2,367,401,869
Expenditure	2,414,708,258	2,545,374,139
Difference	+183,218,291	+177,972,270

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to bring the budget for general practitioner prescriptions within the cash-limited budgets of health authorities or health commissions; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The cost of drugs prescribed by general practitioner fund holders are contained within fund-holding budgets, which in turn form part of the cash limited hospital, community and family health services budgets of regional health authorities. We have no plans to extend these arrangements to non-fund-holding general practitioners.

Locum Doctors

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will require all national health service provider authorities and trusts to take up references on applicants for locum clinical appointments; and if she will make a statement;

(2) if she will make a statement on the arrangements whereby locum doctors are appointed in the hospital service.

Mr. Sackville: Health authorities and national health service trusts are responsible for the appointment of locum doctors in the hospital service. There are clear guidelines from the Department, designed to ensure that locum doctors are of an adequate standard to carry out the duties required of them. These include both checks on qualifications and references from previous employers. Copies of the guidelines (EL(89)P/148 and EL(92)53) are available in the Library.

GP Fund Holders

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide an estimate for the value of funding allocations retained by general practitioner fund holders at the year end.

Mr. Sackville: This information will not be available until the final 1992-93 accounts have been audited.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 20 July, Official Report, column 14, if she will estimate expenditure on trusts for 1993-94.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Greenwich (Mr. Raynsford) on 17 May at column 29.

District Health Authority

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average annual cost per whole-time equivalent at (a) current and (b) 1986-87 prices in each year from 1986-87 of an executive member of a district health authority.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Complaints Review

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she has appointed the members of the complaints review she announced at 18 June.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I am pleased to announce that the following have agreed to be members of the National Health Service Complaints Review Committee chaired by Professor Wilson:

Professor Judy Allsop, Professor of Health Policy, South Bank University; member, Citizen's Charter Complaints Task Force.

Dr. Ewen Bramwell, General Practitioner.

Mr. Chris Dabbs, Chief Officer, Salford Community Health Council.

Mr. Steve Forster, Personnel Director, London and Scandinavian Metallurgical Co. Ltd; member, Rotherham FHSA.

Mrs. Vivienne Harpwood, Head of Medico-legal Department, University College of Wales, Cardiff.

Mrs. Deirdre Hutton, Chair, Scottish Consumer Council.

Mr. John James, Chief Executive, Kensington and Chelsea and Westminster FHSA.

Mr. Pat Killen, Managing Director, Tyrone Crystal; Chairman, Northern Ireland Citizen's Charter Board.

Mr. Bruce MacGillivray, Consultant in Clinical Neurophysiology, Royal Free Hospital Trust.

Rabbi Julia Neuberger, Chair, Camden and Islington Community Trust; Vice President, Patients Association.

Ms Irene Scott, Nurse Executive Director, Christie Hospital

Empty Homes

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many vacant bed spaces were identified in the task force on empty homes as being in the ownership of NHS Estates but unsuitable for commercial or social lettings; and how many of them were (a) in nurses' hostels, (b) in doctors' residences, (c) inside hospital grounds, (d) outside hospital grounds and (e) in each regional health authority area.

Mr. Sackville: Vacant bed spaces in hostels were generally considered by the task force to be unsuitable for commercial or social lettings. Based on a survey which covered about 75 per cent. of the national health service, it is estimated that at 1 December last year there were 11,400 vacant hostel places, of which 9,280 were inside, and 2,120 outside hospital grounds. Analysis of this information by nurses' hostels, doctors' residencies and regional health authority area are not available. Ownership responsibility for NHS staff residential accommodation lies with health authorities and trusts. The Department is issuing guidance which will include examples of good practice to encourage and assist NHS authorities to make use of empty places wherever practicable.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many empty bed spaces identified by her Department for the empty homes task force were (a) in hostels with shared facilities where all the bed spaces are vacant, (b) in hostels with shared facilities where some of the bed spaces are occupied and (c) in hostels or homes without shared facilities.

Mr. Sackville: From the survey carried out last year, it is estimated that across the national health service at 1 December the number of empty bed spaces were (a) 200, (b) 11,200 and (c) 3,700. These figures include properties being refurbished, due for demolition, and in the process of disposal as well as those available for letting.

Dentistry (Sterilisation)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration she has given to the provision of additional funding to NHS dental practices to cover the cost of heat-sterilising handpieces between the treatment of each patient.

Mr. Sackville: The Department reimburses in full to the profession, on an average basis, all dentists' national health service practice expenses. In 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90 the health Departments, in their discussions with the profession in the dental rates study group (DRSG), explicitly recognised that dentists were likely to incur additional expenses for cross infection control and extra money was made available in those years. From 1990-91 onwards, any additional costs incurred from 1987-88 to 1989-90 are included in the baseline of dentists' practice expenses used by the DRSG to forecast dentists' future expenses and would have been reimbursed in the normal way.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what data are held by her Department in relation to the different sterilisation practices employed by NHS dental practitioners for the cleaning of dental handpieces and the number of dentists who use each technique.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Alcohol and Drug Treatment

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment she has made of whether sufficient residential treatment is now available for people with alcohol or drug problems;

(2) how many residential services for people with alcohol or drug problems have deregistered with their local authority since January; and how many bed spaces this involves;

(3) when she will make available the report from Goldsmiths college on the implementation of community care and its impact on the provision of residential treatment for people with alcohol or drug problems.

Mr. Bowis: Comprehensive information on residential services for people who misuse alcohol and drugs and on the scale of deregistration is not available centrally. It is expected that some data on these aspects of services provision will be included in the report by Goldsmiths college which has been commissioned to monitor the impact of community care on service provision for alcohol and drug misusers during the first three months of implementation. A copy of the report will be placed in the Library shortly.

Ultrasound

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she had made of the evaluation carried out as to the long-term safety of ultrasound exposure of the foetus and newborn; and on what studies she had based her conclusions.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 22 July 1993]: The available evidence on the safety of ultrasound in pregnancy is contained in the publication "Effective Care in Pregnancy and Childbirth" (1989), a copy of which is available in the Library. It concluded that:

"so far, there is no evidence that ultrasonography in human pregnancy has any harmful biological or physical effects."

Details of trials conducted since 1989 are included in the Oxford database of perinatal trials. Copies of extracts from the database relating to ultrasound will be placed in the Library.

An ad hoc group of the Chief Medical Officer's radiological advisory committee is currently examining the general safety of ultrasound.

Hypnotherapy

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans there are to introduce standardisation of training techniques, registration on a community basis and certification for hypnotherapists; if she will give details of her Department's response to the British Medical Association's report "Complementary Medicine —New Approaches to Good Practice"; and if she will make a statement about her Department's view of hypnotherapy services and their funding.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 22 July 1993]: We support the efforts of reputable training institutes in hypnotherapy to develop standards of training, voluntary registration and certification of hypnotherapists. The British Medical Association's report will make a significant contribution to aiding understanding in the field of complementary medicine and we shall consider its recommendations with interest and care. Hypnotherapy is, in some cases, already provided in the national health service as an adjunct to other treatment by doctors, dentists, psychologists and other health care professionals. We are currently reviewing these matters to examine whether there is a further role for Government in promoting safe and competent practice in this field.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Sproat: The Government continue to help small businesses through improvements to the business climate, through deregulation and through specific programmes of support and assistance.

My Department has been an active participant in the Government's deregulation initiative. It is undertaking a thorough review of the impact of regulations, from whatever source, on the business sectors in which it has a policy interest, and I have recently commissioned a report on deregulation and the tourism industry, which includes a large number of small businesses. The Department will undertake a risk analysis and full compliance cost assessment before putting forward any new regulatory measures which might affect business, and aims to maintain and improve its links and consultation arrangements with businesses operating within the areas where I have a policy interest.

The Department's fundamental review of the public library service will reflect the extent to which public libraries play a key role in the provision of information for small businesses.

Businesses of various sizes have been successful in tendering competitively for the provision of contracted out services, in supplies and works for the Department, its agencies and its non-departmental public bodies.

Data Processing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the numbers of staff by grade that are employed in his Department and agencies in the automatic data processing functional specialism.

Mr. Sproat: There are no staff employed in the automatic data processing functional specialism in the Department of National Heritage or its agencies.

Victoria County History

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps he is taking to ensure that sufficient financial support for the continuation of the Victoria county history.

Mr. Sproat: I am aware of the concerns about funding for the Victoria county history (VCH) and I know that my hon. Friend visited the Secretary of State for National Heritage with colleagues last December.

Funding for the VCH does not fall to the Department of National Heritage, but rests with the university of London and the county councils. However, my Department recognises the valuable work being done by the VCH and has identified some possible sources of additional funding, details of which have been passed to the Institute of Historical Research, which manages the project.

Blind and Partially Sighted People

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what arrangement his Department makes to ensure that blind and partially sighted people have access to information produced by his Department where it has not been published in alternative media such as Braille, large print or tape;

(2) what is his Department's policy on which information produced by his Department is published in alternative media to standard print such as Braille, tape or large print.

Mr. Brooke: The Department of National Heritage keeps under review the need to make information available to blind and partially sighted people.

Last year, the Department made available Braille copies of the popular version of the BBC consultation document issued by the Department.

Royal Parks

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when the next stage of the review of the royal parks will commence.

Mr. Sproat: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Royal Parks Agency under its chief executive, Mr. David Welch. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. R. Boyce to Mr. Nick Raynsford, dated 26 July 1993:

In the absence of the Chief Executive, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for National Heritage has asked me to reply to your Written Parliamentary Question asking:

When the next stage of the Review of the Royal Parks will commence.

The Review group chaired by Dame Jennifer Jenkins have recently completed their report on St. James's Park, The Green Park and Regent's Park. The programme for future reviews is still to be decided.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Church of England

45. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make it his policy to review the amount of time given by Parliament to, and the cost to Parliament of, the consideration of Church of England matters.

Mr. Newton: I have no plans to do so.

Sittings of the House

46. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether he is now in a position to respond to the report from the Select Committee on Sittings of the House (House of Commons Paper 20 of Session 1991-92).

50. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make a statement on the progress of amending the hours of sittings of the House.

Mr. Newton: In the light of further discussions I have had with the right hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) I will want to consider how we might take this forward. I regret that we have been unable to make more progress before the recess.

Parliamentary Questions

47. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Lord President of the Council what proposals he has to implement the recommendations of the Procedure Committee's report on parliamentary questions, first report of 1992-93 (HC 687).

Mr. Newton: The Government are presently considering its further response to the Procedure Committee report in the light of that Committee's revised recommendations following the Government's original response.

Departmental Staff

48. Mr. Purchase: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is the total number of staff employed in his office; and how many are men and how many women.

Mr. Newton: The total number of staff employed in the Privy Council Office is 33 of which 16 are women. In my private office the figures are seven and four respectively.

Iraq

49. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will set up a Select Committee to consider whether the House should be consulted before further military action is taken against Iraq.

Mr. Newton: No. Ample opportunity already exists for discussion of these issues and, in fact, I understand the hon. Member has one of the Consolidated Fund debates later this evening on matters relating to Iraq.

Nursery Facilities

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he will make a statement on the progress of the survey of possible users of nursery facilities within the Palace.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: The Administration Committee has reached agreement on which company should conduct the survey of potential demand for child care facilities. Arrangements are being made for the preparation of a questionnaire which will be circulated in the autumn to Members, their staff, staff of the House, and others employed on the parliamentary estate.

PRIME MINISTER

Japan (Visit)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what specific representations he received from Japanese non-governmental organisations on (a) nuclear non-proliferation, (b) international trade in plutonium and other nuclear explosives and (c) nuclear waste management assistance for Russia, during his visit to Japan for the recent G7 summit.

The Prime Minister: I did not receive any representations from non-governmental organisations on these issues during my recent visit to Japan.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 19 May 1992 to the hon. Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes), Official Report, column 113, if he will list the members of the new ministerial committee on the environment, referred in paragraph 4.5 of the consultation paper "UK Strategy for Sustainable Development"; how often it intends to meet; and if he will provide details of its remit.

The Prime Minister: The remit and membership of the ministerial committee on the environment remain as stated in my answer of 19 May 1992, Official Report, column 113. Meetings take place as necessary.

Drug Misuse

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Prime Minister if he is satisfied with the present arrangements for co-ordinating Government action on drug misuse between the different Departments of State; and what proposals he has to improve them.

The Prime Minister: The Government are committed to bringing forward proposals to improve further the co-ordination of the control of drug misuse. Options are currently under consideration.

Top Salaries Review Body

Mr. Wolfson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the Top Salaries Review Body.

The Prime Minister: The name of the Top Salaries Review Body (TSRB) has been changed to the Senior Salaries Review Body (SSRB). At the same time the Review Body's terms of reference have been revised. Both these changes have been introduced at the Review Body's request, and have been agreed with it. The revised terms of reference are as follows:

"To advise the Prime Minister on the remuneration of holders of judicial office; senior civil servants, senior officers of the armed forces; and such other public appointments as may from time to time be specified.

The Prime Minister may also ask the Review Body to advise from time to time on the pay and pensions of Members of Parliament and their allowances; Peer's allowances; and on the pay, pensions and allowances of Ministers and others whose pay is determined by a Ministerial and other Salaries Order.

Procedures

The Review Body will make other recommendations as it sees fit in order that the level of remuneration for the groups covered by its remit is sufficient to ensure, over time, the recruitment and retention and motivation of suitably able and qualified people to exercise their different responsibilities; to ensure that, as appropriate, the remuneration for the remit groups relates coherently to that of their subordinates, encourages efficiency and effectiveness, and takes account of the different management and organisational structures which may be in place from time to time; to relate reward to performance where appropriate;

to maintain the confidence of those covered by the Review Body's remit that its recommendations have been properly and fairly determined; and to ensure that the remuneration of those covered by the remit is consistent with the Government's equal opportunities policy.

In making recommendations, the review body shall consider any factors which the Government and other witnesses may draw to its attention. In particular it shall have regard to:

differences in terms and conditions of employment between the public and private sector and between the remit groups, taking account of relative job security and the value of benefits in kind; changes in national pay systems, including flexibility and the reward of success; and job weight in differentiating the remuneration of particular posts; and the need to maintain a broad linkage between the remuneration of the three main remit groups, while allowing sufficient flexibility to take account of the circumstances of each group.

The Review Body will take account of the evidence it receives about wider economic considerations and the affordability of its recommendations."

Overseas Visits

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister how many overseas visits he has made since he assumed office; and if he will list the venue, the duration, the purpose and the cost to public funds of the visits.

Deregulation (Construction Industry)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting held on 20 July with representatives of the deregulation task force on the construction industry.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 23 July 1993]: On 20 July I chaired a progress meeting on deregulation attended by Ministers and permanent secretaries from regulatory Departments, Lord Sainsbury and all the task force chairmen. We welcomed progress on specific deregulation measures to reduce the burden on business. Ministers agreed to address changes requiring primary legislation as soon as parliamentary time permits. Ministers also agreed to publish "Working with Business: A Code for Enforcement Agencies" and a report on the operation of European Community law in the United Kingdom; to review how duplication between enforcement agencies might be eliminated; to require a small business litmus test of the impact on them of any new regulations; and to set up an eighth task force focusing on charities and voluntary organisations.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Health and Safety Training

34. Mr. Spellar: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what representations he has received about health and safety training for staff of the House.

Mr. Beith: None.

POLIS

35. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what measures are being taken to facilitate the provision of POLIS within Members' offices via the parliamentary data and video network; and when the network will be extended to the Norman Shaw buildings.

Mr. Beith: The parliamentary data and video network is at present available to Members on the lower floors of Millbank and a small number of Members outside via a telephone link. The network has been authorised only as a pilot phase and is currently being reviewed by the Information Committee, which hopes to report later this year.

Any plans to extend the network, including POLIS, to the Norman Shaw buildings or elsewhere will need to await approval of the service by the House, following the report from the Information Committee and the provision of the necessary funds in the estimates.

Members' Children (Recess)

39. Mr. Hanson: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what recent representations he has received about providing additional facilities for Members' children during the parliamentary recess; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Beith: The Commission itself has received no such representations on this issue. Details of the Westminster holiday play scheme, in which the children of Members, their staff and staff of the House may participate, were publicised in the all-party notice and circulated to staff. In addition, progress is being made in the preparation of a questionnaire, which will be circulated in the autumn, as part of a survey to determine potential demand for child care facilities.

Costs

40. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chairman of the Finance and Services Committee what new proposals he has to reduce the costs for which the House of Commons Commission are responsible.

Mr. Channon: As part of its responsibility to improve the financial management of House Departments and to prepare the draft estimates for the House of Commons votes, the Finance and Services Committee continually seeks to improve the value for money of services provided to the House. Recent initiatives by House Departments which it has supported include revised arrangements for the telephone operator service and the introduction of least-cost routing; and the use of desk-top publishing in the Refreshment Department. The Committee has asked the Administration Committee to study the provision of documents, stationery, and office supplies to hon. Members with a view to reducing costs, and looks forward to receiving its recommendations. Other areas of expenditure will be examined in due course in consultation with the relevant domestic committees, Heads of Department and the internal auditor.

The level of expenditure on House services is affected by the degree of activity of the House, its Committees and individual Members. This matter is reviewed in more detail in the Fifteenth Annual Report of the Commission, to be published on 6 September as House of Commons Paper No. 820.

Terrace Dining Rooms

41. Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Chairman of the Finance and Services Committee what representations he has received about the use of the income from the use of the Terrace Dining Rooms.

Mr. Channon: None, although the use of income derived from banqueting services in the Terrace Dining Rooms was included in the Committee's review of the Refreshment Department trading fund.

SCOTLAND

Police Authority

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what method of election or appointment he will introduce for members of the new Police Authority arising from the proposed changes to local government in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: All new councils in Scotland will be police authorities and their members will be elected in the usual way. Where police force areas cover more than one council area there will be joint police committees for those forces made up of representatives from the councils in the force area.

Transport Responsibilities

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has held with regional councils in Scotland relating to the transfer of their transport responsibilities following the move to single-tier authorities.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend has discussed a range of subjects related to local government reform, including transport issues, with a number of regional councils and other local authority interests. In addition we have paid careful attention to the many responses to our consultation paper, "Shaping the New Councils", from regional councils and others, which discussed transport arrangements under the new single-tier structure.

Community Care

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he proposes to take to ensure that full use is made of the independent sector in the development of community care policy.

Mr. Lang: Two of the key objectives of our community care policy are the development of a flourishing mixed economy of care, alongside good quality public services, and securing better value for money. In order to achieve this I issued a direction on choice of residential care and I have asked all social work authorities to provide information about how this is implemented. I also consider it necessary that social work authorities should be aware of the full cost of their own provision and that this information should be publicly available. Under my powers under section 199 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1973 I am asking all authorities to let me have a statement of the full costs of their homes and will emphasise the need to have full regard to value for money when making decisions on the purchase of residential care places.

I am monitoring closely, through statistical returns made to my Department, the level of use of the independent sector by local authorities and in the light of this will consider whether any further action is needed.

Hospital Re-admissions

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish rates of re-admission to hospital following discharge.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 23 July 1993]: As I indicated in reply to the hon. Member's question on outcome measurements on 14 July 1993 at column 519, pilot outcome measures including 28-day emergency re-admission rate after discharge from medical specialties were included in the discussion document "Clinical Outcome Measures" issued on 7 July 1993, a copy of which has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Yugoslavia

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions took place at the meeting of the EC Foreign Ministers on 19 July regarding economic and diplomatic sanctions against the Republic of Croatia; what proposals on this issue were tabled by the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Foreign Ministers of the European Community agreed in Brussels on 19 July to consider withdrawing Croatia's preferential trading benefits with the European Community, in view of Croatia's continued involvement in the conflict in Bosnia. Croatia will have to change its ways if it wishes to have the kind of relationship that it seeks with the European Community.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will expel the Croatian ambassador to London and recall Her Majesty's ambassador to Zagreb in protest at the Croatian Government's support for the Bosnian-Croat regime.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Such measures are not under consideration. But as Heads of Government made clear at the Group of Seven economic summit in Tokyo, the Croats and the Serbs risk placing themselves beyond the pale of the international community and stronger measures cannot be excluded. European Community Foreign Ministers also agreed in Brussels on 19 July to consider the withdrawal of Croatia's preferential trading benefits with the European Community, in view of Croatia's continued involvement in the conflict in Bosnia.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received of conditions at Fojnica children's hospital in central Bosnia; how many children were found abandoned in the hospital; how many children have either died or are in a critical condition; what representations Her Majesty's Government plan to make to Alija Izetbegovic concerning the actions of his forces at Fojnica; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We share the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees' concern about the desperate plight of the patients in the hospital in Fojnica. This is a further example of how innocent civilians have suffered as a result of the conflict in Bosnia. We have repeatedly urged all parties to respect the rights and interests of civilians.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the relationship between United Nations Security Council resolution 820 and World Health Organisation resolutions 41.31 and 42.24; what restrictions there are on the importation of medicines and medical equipment into the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: United Nations Security Council resolution 820 is fully compatible with the terms of the World Health Assembly resolutions 41.31 and 42.24. Medical supplies and foodstuffs are specifically exempted from the sanctions imposed on Serbia and Montenegro under United Nations Security Council resolution 820.

Supplies intended strictly for medical purposes are permitted to enter Serbia and Montenegro under United Nations Security Council resolutions 757 and 820 following notification to the Sanctions Committee established pursuant to resolution 724.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment has been made of the effect on the economy of (a) Romania and (b) Hungary of the economic sanctions applied against the former Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The economies of Romania, Hungary and other neighbouring countries have suffered damage from sanctions against former Yugoslavia. It is difficult to quantify this, particularly given the problem of isolating the effects of sanctions from the other factors influencing these economies. In our view, the international financial institutions, especially the International Monetary Fund, are the best placed to make this assessment. This they are already doing as part of their regular activities and programmes with these countries. We have been active in encouraging the IMF's efforts in this area.

We have also strongly supported action by the Yugoslav Sanctions Committee under the provisions of article 50 of the United Nations charter. The Committee, and subsequently the Security Council, has endorsed Romanian, Hungarian and other requests for assistance under article 50. Their recommendations have included a request that the international financial institutions be invited to consider how their assistance programmes and facilities might be helpful to affected states.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the total number of detainees in Bosnia-Herzegovina held in (a) Serbian prisons or camps, (b) Muslim prisons or camps and (c) Croat prisons or camps; and what is his estimate in each case of the number of detainees who are civilians.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) regularly visits 1,098 prisoners held by Bosnian Serbs in detention camps in Bosnia, 951 held by Bosnian Muslims and 398 held by Bosnian Croats. No figures are available as to how many of these are civilians.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees regarding the establishment by Bosnian-Croat forces of a detention camp for Muslim males at the Mostar heliodrome; how many are estimated to be detained; what requests have so far been made to visit these prisoners by UNHCR or the International Committee of the Red Cross; what response such requests have had; and if he will publish the reports he has received regarding this detention camp; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received no reports on this centre from UNHCR. The International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) regularly visits 15 prisoners held by the Bosnian-Croats in a detention centre at Mostar Rodoc, but we have received no details of ICRC's findings, in accordance with its rules over confidentiality.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the total number of prisons and camps currently operating in Bosnia-Herzegovina; how many are under the control of (a) Muslims, (b) Croats and (c) Serbs; and to how many such camps or prisons in each case international organisations have been denied access.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) regularly visits six places of detention under the control of Bosnian Croats: 15 places of detention under the control of Bosnian Muslims; and 13 places of detention under the control of Bosnian Serbs. ICRC suspect that further places of detention in unknown locations may exist.

Bougainville

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards the conflict in Bougainville.

Mr. Goodlad: We regard the conflict in Bougainville as an internal matter for the Government of Papua New Guinea, but we have made known to the PNG authorities our concern that a lasting solution should be achieved by peaceful means.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of Papua New Guinea about access for humanitarian organisations including the International Committeee of the Red Cross to Bougainville.

Mr. Goodlad: There have been no such discussions. The International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies (IFRC) withdrew from Bougainville after operating an emergency relief programme between April 1991 and February 1992 which the IFRC reported to have achieved most of its set objectives.

Data Processing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the numbers of staff by grade that are employed in his Department and agencies in the automatic data processing functional specialism.

Mr. Goodlad: There are 155 officers in the FCO and agencies in the automatic data processing functional specialism.

Ninety-eight are in the diplomatic wing, in the following grades:

United Nations Arms Register

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many countries from the far east have deposited their entries for the United Nations arms register.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: To date we understand that 10 countries from the Asia Pacific region have submitted data to the United Nations register of conventional arms. The United Nations Secretary General will report in the autumn on the register's first year of operation and on the data received from member states. The United Nations Resolution establishing the register requests that such data be forwarded to the United Nations Secretary General. We do not therefore see copies of other member states' returns as a matter of course. With our European partners, we are actively encouraging those states who have yet to submit data to do so.

Blind and Partially Sighted People

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's policy on which information produced by his Department is published in alternative media to standard print such as Braille, tape or large print.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Her Majesty's Stationery Office has a broad-ranging licence with the Royal National Institute for the Blind for the ad hoc reproduction of any Her Majesty's Stationery Office publication without fee, including Foreign Commonwealth Office material when published with HMSO.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements his Department makes to ensure that blind and partially sighted people have access to information produced by his Department where it has not been published in alternative media such as Braille, large print or tape.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Inquiries to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and Overseas Development Administration from members of the public who identify themselves as blind or partially sighted are infrequent, but are dealt with by telephone.

Computer Consultancies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all the computer consultancies employed by his Department and agencies, since November 1991, the tasks for which they were engaged, and the total cost to his Department.

Mr. Goodlad: The tables list the computer consultancies employed by the diplomatic and aid wings of the Department and its agencies since November 1991. The total cost in each wing is £7,252,824 and £430,803 respectively. In the diplomatic wing the consultancies have been employed on the implementation of the information systems strategic plan, at home and overseas. The tasks include feasibility studies, programme and project management, baselining and enhancements to systems, software development and installation, contingency planning and information technology training, and systems maintenance. More detailed information on the tasks of individual consultancies could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Armaments

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the increase in armaments of (a) China, (b) Japan, (c) the Korean peninsula and (d) Indochina over the past five years.

Mr. Goodlad: A number of countries in the Asia Pacific region are in the process of modernising their armed forces. As yet there is no significant increase in their power projection capabilities. Despite prospects for improved stability in Indo-China, potential troublespots remain in the Asia Pacific, not least North Korea.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Goodlad: We continue to place a high priority on helping small businesses, through improvements to the business climate, through deregulation and through specific programmes of support and assistance.

Small firms are given full opportunity to bid for business with the Department. It is also our policy to pay invoices on time.

Business transacted by the Department with small firms in the United Kingdom has increased from £24·2 million in the financial year 1991-92 to £35·8 million in 1992-93. In 1992-93 26·9 per cent. of total expenditure on the purchase of goods and services was with small firms.

Israel

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 16 July, Official Report, column 725, what approaches he has made to other members of the western European group in support of the admission of Israel.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have discussed Israel's membership of the Western European and Others Group on a number of occasions with our EC partners, to whom we have made our position clear.

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all those services or functions contracted out in his Department and agencies, since November 1991, in which the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were not applied.

Mr. Goodlad: Since November 1991, the diplomatic wing of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office has contracted out the adminstration of the diplomatic service world-wide all risks insurance scheme and some aspects of purchasing services for office supplies and machinery. In neither case were the regulations applied. The aid wing has not contracted out any activities during this period.

Overseas Land

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all the land overseas which is owned by the Government for non-military purposes, giving the number of hectares; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office owns freehold land at the 144 overseas diplomatic posts listed.

The total land area of the compounds, office sites and residence sites in the list is about 240 hectares. The land area of the staff houses listed is not readily available, but is estimated to be of the order of 40 hectares. The balance of the land occupied by diplomatic posts overseas is held on various leasehold or condominium terms.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office keeps the overseas estate under continuous review, and rationalises its land holdings and disposes of any surplus land where it is practicable, necessary and cost-effective to do so.

Libya

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has had from the Arab League about proposals for reviewing UN sanctions against Libya.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received no such representations about the forthcoming sanctions review.

Nigeria

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards Nigeria in the light of the failure of the military government to transfer power to democratically elected political leadership.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 1 July at column 589.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Nigerian authorities about the detention without charges of the author Mr. Ken Saro-Wiwa.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are extremely concerned by the detention of Mr. Saro-Wiwa on charges of sedition and treason, and by reports that he has been denied proper medical treatment. The detention of Mr. Saro-Wiwa is only one of a number of recent detentions of civil and human rights activists by the Nigerian military authorities. These arrests have been carried out under military decrees. This is one of the reasons why we attach so much importance to the military handing over power to democratic civilian rule by 27 August.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Nigeria about their decision to hold fresh elections on 31 July.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The new national electoral commission has proposed the holding of fresh elections on 14 August. We have repeatedly made clear our wish to see a transfer to a democratic civilian administration by 27 August.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received from the high commission in Nigeria about the outbreak of violence since the election; and what measures he is taking to ensure the safety of United Kingdom citizens in Nigeria.

Mr. Lennox Boyd: Our high commission reported widespread unrest and disorder in south-west Nigeria in late June and early July, from which a number of deaths resulted. We deeply regret the loss of life and very much hope that the current political crisis can be resolved without further bloodshed.

The British community in Nigeria has been advised, through the warden system, to exercise caution, and that residents without essential business, especially dependants, should consider advancing their summer leave plans and postponing school children's holiday visits to Nigeria.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take action with other countries and with international organisations including the World bank and the International Monetary Fund to encourage General Babangida to implement the democratically expressed wish of the Nigerian people.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Throughout the current political crisis in Nigeria, caused by the annulment of the 12 June election results by the federal military Government, we have consulted closely with our partners and allies. The European Council and the United States have issued statements expressing their concern at the cancellation of the elections and the hope that the transition to democratic civilian rule will take place by 27 August, and have announced measures aimed at the Nigerian military similar to those taken by the United Kingdom on 24 June. The Commonwealth Secretary General and many other countries have also issued similar statements of concern, including Japan, Russia, Australia, Norway and Canada.

Freehold Land

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, if he will list all the land overseas which is owned by the Government for non-military purposes, giving the number of hectares; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office own freehold land at the 144 diplomatic Posts overseas, listed as follows.

The total land area of the compounds, office sites and residence sites in this list is about 240 hectares. The land area of the staff houses listed is not readily available, but is estimated to be of the order of 40 hectares. The balance of the land occupied by diplomatic posts overseas is held on various leasehold or condominium terms.

TRANSPORT

Bus Station, London SE16

11. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on London Transport's capital commitment to an enclosed bus station at Canada Water, London SE16.

Mr. Norris: I understand that LT is currently assessing the costs and benefits of building a roofed bus station at Canada Water.

Public Transport, London

12. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects next to meet the chairman of London Transport to discuss improvements to public transport in London.

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I meet the chairman of London Transport regularly to discuss a variety of issues, including future improvements and standards of service.

Rail Privatisation

13. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the consultants who have been working on rail privatisation; and what is the cost to date of such consultants.

Mr. Freeman: I will write to the hon. Member with full details, but the Department employs 10 consultants. The cost for the financial year 1993-94 is estimated at £12 million.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the extent to which British Rail would be able to undercut private sector enterprises tendering for rail franchises.

Mr. Freeman: No such estimates are possible, but I am concerned that it would be very difficult to have a fair and equal competition if British Rail was a bidder.

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will ensure that the proposed creation of RailTrack in April 1994 and the introduction of a new track charging regime will not result in additional financial burdens falling on metropolitan local authorities.

Mr. Freeman: I have given a commitment to the metropolitan local authorities that, if the restructuring of the railway industry results in higher charges in 1994-95 for the service levels that they currently support, measures will be taken, including, if necessary, the payment of special grants, to ensure that these changes do not result in an additional financial burden falling on them in 1994-95. I will be discussing the position for future years with them.

Road Closures (City of London)

14. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps his Department is taking to monitor the effect on other parts of London arising from the City Corporation's current road closure scheme.

Mr. Norris: I have a quasi-judicial role if a permanent scheme is brought forward and I am advised it would be improper for my Department to collect its own data. If the City of London Corporation does wish to make the scheme permanent, it will require the consent of the traffic director and will need to provide him with information about the effects on the strategic road network on all parts of London.

West Coast Main Line

15. Mr. Olner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman designate of RailTrack to discuss services on the west coast main line.

Mr. Freeman: Current services on the west coast main line are a matter for the British Railways Board.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to European institutions with a view to securing financial support for investment in the west coast main line.

Mr. Freeman: We have recently announced the appointment of Hambros Bank Limited to examine the scope for a joint venture to renew the infrastructure of the west coast main line. During the course of its study it will undoubtedly examine closely the possible use of funds from European sources.

Air Pollution

16. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the monitoring of transport related air pollution.

Mr. MacGregor: The Department of the Environment monitors air quality across a range of sites. It issues daily bulletins of recorded levels and a forecast of the next day's air quality.

My Department publishes annual calculations of emissions from the transport sector.

Fishing Fatalities

17. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many fishermen, serving as crew members of United Kingdom registered fishing vessels, lost their lives in each of the past five years; and in how many cases of such fatalities vessels were lost.

Mr. Norris: The number of United Kingdom fishermen who lost their lives as a result of accidents to United Kingdom fishing vessels in the years 1988 to 1992 is 18, 19, 22, 25 and eight. The number of United Kingdom fishing vessels lost in those years is 22, 22, 17, 41, and 32.

Bypasses

18. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many bypasses he plans to start in the current financial year.

Mr. Norris: We plan to start 19 new bypasses in this financial year. Many of the 22 other schemes we plan to start this year will also remove traffic from local communities.

Merchant Marine

19. Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the prospects for the British Merchant Marine.

Mr. Norris: I refer the hon. Lady to the statement that I made in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Waterson) on Monday 28 June 1993, Official Report, column 642.

Docklands and Jubilee Lines Extensions

20. Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects agreement to be reached to enable work to begin on both the Jubilee line extension and the Docklands light railway Lewisham extension.

Mr. Norris: Once negotiations have been satisfactorily concluded between LT and the parties involved with the financing of Canary Wharf on the basis of their contribution to the Jubilee line extension and once the Olympia and York Company comes out of administration, the Secretary of State will be able to authorise the start of construction.

A private Bill enabling construction of an extension of the Docklands light railway to Lewisham received Royal Assent on 27 May. We have made it clear that this scheme should be undertaken by the private sector. The means by which proposals can best be placed before investors, consistent with our manifesto commitment to privatise DLR as a whole, are under consideration.

Second Severn Bridge

21. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of progress on the construction of the second Severn bridge; and what is the likely opening date.

Mr. Key: Good progress is being made on the construction of the second Severn bridge, which is on schedule for opening to traffic in spring 1996.

Bus Deregulation

22. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies his Department has made of the effect of bus deregulation on through and joint ticketing schemes.

Mr. Freeman: No specific studies have been made of the effect of bus deregulation on through and joint ticketing schemes. Ticketing arrangements are a matter for operators and local authorities. Successful multi-operator ticketing schemes are in operation in the metropolitan areas and in several counties.

M4 (Widening)

23. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress of his plans to widen the M4 between junctions 5 and 15.

Mr. Key: We expect to start public consultation in the autumn on a scheme for the improvement of the M4 between junctions 4B and 8/9. Work is proceeding satisfactorily on other commissions to study the need and options for increasing the capacity of the motorway between junction 8/9 and junction 15. Public consultation on these schemes will take place once this work is completed.

Train Leasing

24. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects British Railways Board to announce the results of the tender process for new trains under the recent £150 million leasing facility.

Mr. MacGregor: I expect British Rail to advise me of its decision within the next two months.

Motorway (Charges)

26. Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the plans of other European countries to impose charges for the use of their motorway networks.

Mr. Key: The Green Paper "Paying for Better Motorways" (Cm 2200) describes the charging systems for motorways already in use in a number of countries in Europe and elsewhere.

Since then, Belgium, Denmark, Germany, Luxembourg and the Netherlands have announced their intention to develop a joint motorway permit system for heavy goods vehicles. Germany intends to begin field trials of the technology for electronic motorway charging in 1994. Several other countries are investigating the possibility of electronic charging.

British Rail Rolling Stock

27. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total investment in British Rail rolling stock in (a) 1979 and (b) 1992.

Mr. Freeman: Total British Rail investment in rolling stock in 1979 (excluding service vehicles) was £93 million (£232 million at 1992-93 prices). Total British Rail investment in rolling stock in 1992-93 (excluding service vehicles) was £386 million.

Bournemouth Central Station

28. Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the restoration of Bournemouth Central station.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that British Rail hopes that work on the restoration of Bournemouth station can begin in 1996-97, and should take about 15 months to complete. This project will be the responsibility of Railtrack, which will own station freeholds.

Railways (Noise Insulation)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the proposed noise insulation regulations for new railway lines will be issued for consultation.

Mr. Freeman: A consultation document about the draft regulations and associated technical memorandum will be issued shortly and copies will be placed in the Library of the House. I shall also be writing to all Members in the south east and London whose constituencies may be affected. The consultation period will extend until mid-November.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what role he envisages for the passenger transport authorities and passenger transport executives in the process of specifying and granting franchises for passenger railway services in their areas under the railway privatisation proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I have today written to Councillor Joe Clark, chairman of the Association of Municipal Authorities public transport committee, setting out the role we envisage for the passenger transport authorities and passenger transport executives under our railway privatisation proposals, in the following terms:

Letter from Mr. Roger Freeman to Councillor Joe Clarke:

It is our intention that under our railway privatisation proposals the PTAs and PTEs will continue to have essentially the same role as now in specifying local rail services and paying subsidy, where necessary, to support their specification.

But, as we have discussed, some changes to the present system are going to be necessary to ensure that PTAs and the PTEs fit in properly with the new, privatised structure of the railway, and I promised to write to you explaining how the new system would work.

Many of the trains that serve PTA passengers run on beyond a single PTA area, and it would not be operationally sensible to think of letting franchises covering only parts of a a service. That is why our proposal is that the PTAs and PTEs should be jointly involved with the Franchising Director in specifying and granting the franchises for their services.

That means PTAs/PTEs being fully involved in specifying the service to be franchised, with each PTE specifying the local services to be supported within its area in terms of service level, service quality and fares, and agreeing that specification with the relevant PTA. The Franchising Director will then invite tenders jointly with the PTE, evaluate the bids and negotiate alongside the PTE with prospective franchisees. The PTE will then sign the franchise agreement, subject to the relevant PTA havving agreed the terms.

The PTEs will need to agree with the Franchising Director how franchisees' performance is to be monitored to ensure that they are meeting their contractual obligations, and will be fully involved in the monitoring system, receiving all relevant information on the performance of the franchisee in respect of the services specified by the PTEs. The PTEs will be similarly involved with the Franchising Director in deciding jointly what measures should be taken where a franchisee fails to perform satisfactorily, including, ultimately, termination of the franchise agreement.

The PTAs/PTEs' service specifications will largely determine the trainpaths that will be needed by the franchisee to run their services, and the Franchising Director will involve the PTEs in negotiating the necessary access rights.

I hope this is helpful and reassures you that the PTAs and PTEs will have a full rôle to play in the privatised railway.

Bus Information

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies are under way in his Department on the provision of information for bus users.

Mr. Freeman: The Transport Research Laboratory is conducting a research project for my Department to examine gaps in the current provision of information for bus users, the types of information passengers value most highly, and the extent to which cost-effective information provision can increase bus patronage. The project will include surveys in four selected study areas. The research should be completed next spring.

Concessionary Fares

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what provision he is making to require franchised train operators to participate in the concessionary fares scheme administered by passenger transport authorities, passenger transport executives and other local authorities in their respective areas.

Mr. Freeman: The way such schemes work is by ensuring that the operator of the services suffers no net loss as a result of participating in the scheme. We therefore expect that passenger railway service operators will be willing to participate on a voluntary basis following privatisation, as British Rail does now.

Nevertheless, under the new clause added to the Railways Bill at Committee stage in the House of Lords in respect of fares and discount schemes, every franchise agreement will include a provision requiring the franchise operator to participate in, charge fares in accordance with, and otherwise comply with the requirements of discount fares schemes approved by the franchising director. The Secretary of State also intends to instruct the franchising director to include a provision in franchise agreements which will enable the franchising director to require franchisees to take part in local authority concessionary fares schemes, provided that there is no net cost to the franchisee or the franchising director. It would thus be possible for a local authority which wanted a franchisee to join its scheme to request the franchising director to invoke this provision in the franchise agreement.

It would also be possible for the PTAs/PTEs to seek to include a provision in the franchise agreements to which they are a party requiring the franchisee to join in their concessionary fares schemes.

Vehicle Inspectorate

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the Vehicle Inspectorate Executive Agency annual report will be published.

Mr. Key: The inspectorate's annual report is being published today. Copies are being placed in the Library.

Official Travel

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last travelled in an official capacity on a London midibus; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: My right hon. and hon. Friends and I regularly use various forms of public transport, including midibuses.

Large Goods Vehicle Driver Training

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 17 November 1992, Official Report, column 161, when he expects the Driving Standards Agency to publish an official learner syllabus for large goods vehicle drivers to help trainers and trainees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The Driving Standards Agency, in collaboration with Her Majesty's Stationery Office, plans to publish a book for lorry drivers towards the end of the year. The book will contain not only the official recommended syllabus for learning to drive a large goods vehicle, but also useful information for trainers, experienced drivers and operators.

Lorry Weights

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many officers are authorised to check lorry weights in each local authority area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: At 31 May 1993, 197 vehicle inspectorate (VI) traffic examiners were authorised by the chief executive to check lorry weights. Traffic examiners are integrated into VI"s district structure and it is not possible to give a breakdown by local authority area.

Weighing is also carried out independently by local authority trading standards officers and the police.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many prosecutions were made against transport companies for overweight loads in each region for 1992 and 1993 to the most recent practicable date.

Mr. Key: The numbers of successful prosecutions obtained by the vehicle inspectorate against goods vehicle operators for overloading offences for the year 1992 and from 1 January to 30 June 1993 are given in the table. During 1992 the inspectorate implemented a change in policy; it now only normally prosecutes where the vehicle is overloaded by 10 per cent. or 1 tonne.

Traffic area regions	Number of successful prosecutions
	1992	[1,2]1993
Eastern	378	143
North Eastern	1,289	411
North Western	774	309
Scotland	523	138
South Eastern	546	224
South Wales	155	54
West Midlands	417	218
Western	1,008	254
Total	5,090	1,751

[1]1 January to 30 June.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are his current plans for the route of the east London river crossing in the light of the exclusion of Oxleas wood from the original route; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: It is too early to say where and in what form future proposals will be developed. Any new proposals will be designed to have less impact on the local environment. As with all departmental road schemes, at the appropriate stages, there will be analyses of alternatives, full environmental assessments and, if necessary, a public inquiry.

Data Processing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the numbers of staff by grade that are employed in his Department and agencies in the automatic data processing functional specialism.

Mr. Norris: The number of staff in the automatic data processing specialism, and in receipt of the ADP pay allowance, is set out in the table.

Department/Agency	Grade	Number
Department of Transport (central)	SEO	19
	HEO	36
	EO	42
	AO	22
Total		119
Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency	SEO	3

Some more senior staff have responsibilities for ADP but are not separately recorded as ADP specialists.

Birmingham Relief Road

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of land acquisition consequential upon the Birmingham northern relief road with particular reference to (a) land purchased to date, (b) the identity of the purchaser and current owner and (c) the amount of land still needing to be purchased.

Mr. Key: The Department has so far purchased 59 properties under the blight provisions since the original road proposals were announced in 1984; a further 16 are in the process of acquisition. The properties will remain in the department's ownership until they are taken for the road scheme or can be declared surplus and sold.

The compulsory purchase orders will be published this autumn and the total land required for the scheme is 596 hectares, of which 482 hectares are agricultural land.

The land already purchased in advance of the compulsory purchase orders (under the blight provisions) does not all fall within the boundaries of the land required for the scheme. Therefore, it would be disproportionately expensive to calculate the exact amount of land still required.

Crossrail

Mr. Deva: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what grants have been made under section 12 of the London Regional Transport Act 1984 or other powers, to London Regional Transport in respect of the acquisition of land blighted by the crossrail project under section 62 of the Planning and Compensation Act 1991; and how much has so far been spent or authorised to be spent for this purpose since the Crossrail Bill was deposited in Parliament in November 1991.

Mr. Norris: A ring-fenced provision is made for all aspects of the Crossrail project. How in detail it is spent is a matter for London Regional Transport. I am advised that it has as yet purchased no blighted properties.

Mr. Deva: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has approved, under section 32(2) of the London Regional Transport Act 1984, the lines upon which London Regional Transport and the promoters of crossrail shall exercise their discretion under section 62 of the Planning and Compensation Act 1991 in relation to the acquisition by agreement of land in cases where it becomes apparent that the enjoyment of the land will be seriously affected by the carrying out or operation of the crossrail works.

Mr. Norris: No; London Regional Transport has made no proposal to my right hon. Friend in respect of its exercise of the power conveyed by section 62 of the Planning and Compensation Act.

Non-insured Vehicles

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the amount of revenue that is lost to the insurance industry each year through non-insured vehicles.

Mr. Key: The insurance industry's best estimate is that about 5 per cent. of all drivers are uninsured, though it is not possible to verify this figure. At that level, the industry estimate that they are losing about £375 million a year in premium income.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he is taking to limit the number of road tax evaders.

Mr. Key: The Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency and the police are taking vigorous and effective action against vehicle excise duty (VED) evaders.

Last year over 435,000 evaders were penalised with £37·5 million recovered. In addition an estimated 180,000 evaders relicensed as a direct result of enforcement action, recovering a further £14 million. The number of evaders brought to book has steadily increased over the last 10 years and this trend is planned to continue. Factors involved include the streamlining of the enforcement effort following an efficiency scrutiny, the introduction of new technology, the continuing programme of joint campaigns with the police and most recently the red windscreen warning notice scheme.

Furness and Cumbria Coastal Lines

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects tenders to be invited to operate the Furness and Cumbria coastal lines.

Mr. Freeman: The Barrow to Carlisle line will be tendered as part of North-West regional railways. The precise timing will be decided by the franchising director after his appointment under the Railways Bill when it has received Royal Assent.

Civil Aviation (Competition)

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to increase competiton in the civil aviation industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The EC third package of aviation liberalisation measures, which came into effect on 1 January, has already created very considerable opportunities for competition in civil aviation in the European Community. The Government will remain keen to ensure that obstacles are not created to hinder airlines wishing to make use of these opportunities. Elsewhere, our aim is to increase the opportunities for competition by seeking to liberalise the United Kingdom's bilateral air service agreements.

Heathrow Airport

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on current Government policy towards a fifth Heathrow terminal.

Mr. Norris: The objectives for airports policy were set out in the 1985 White Paper "Airports Policy"; this noted that the possibility of a fifth terminal at Heathrow would be kept under review, without commitment. The Secretary of State for the Enviornment has called in the planning application for a fifth terminal at Heathrow airport lodged by BAA plc on 17 February 1993. This will be for joint decision by him and my Secretary of State following a public inquiry. Because of this quasi-judicial role, it would not be proper for me to comment on the proposal.

MV Avon

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will undertake appropriate inquiries concerning the cause of the incident at approximately 2 pm on Wednesday 21 July when the MV Avon, en route from Southampton to China, ran aground off Browndown, Gosport; and if he will publish his findings.

Mr. Norris: The accident is being investigated by the Department's marine accident investigation branch. Any lessons to be learnt and how best they can be promulgated and acted upon will be considered by the chief inspector of marine accidents on completion of the investigation; this may include publication of the inspector's findings.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Market Testing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he vets bids for market testing of contracts to establish whether firms' directors have been found to be unfit to act as directors; and what vetting procedures he institutes to check this.

Mr. Nelson: The names of directors of firms bidding for market testing contracts in Her Majesty's Treasury, are checked with Companies House prior to a shortlist being announced. Directors who are unfit to act must be removed from all dealings with their firm and cannot act in a similar capacity within other firms. In the event of the Treasury finding one of its shortlisted firms listing an unfit director, further investigations would take place, through Companies House and the firm itself, to ensure that the director was no longer associated with the firm. If this proved to be the case and the firm had a good reputation and references, it would still be considered for the contract. However if there was still a serious doubt about the firm and/or its directors, it would be removed from the shortlist.

Criminal Offences

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what criminal offences he has introduced in the last five years under delegated legislation.

Mr. Nelson: No central records are kept of information in the form requested. However, the available information shows that since 1988 the following instruments have created new criminal offences by way of delegated legislation:

(a) Regulations made by the Chancellor of the Exchequer: the European Communities (Restriction on Disclosure) Regulations 1991 (S.I. 1991/2779).

(b) Regulations made by Her Majesty's Treasury: the Banking Co-ordination (Second Council Directive) Regulations 1992 (S.I. 1992/3218).

(c) Regulations made by the Commissioners of Customs and Excise: the Customs and Excise (Common Transit) Regulations 1988 (S.I. 1988/1476); the Customs Controls on Importation of Goods Regulations 1991 (S.I. 1991/2724); the Customs Warehousing Regulations 1991 (S.I. 1991/2725); the Free Zone Regulations 1991 (S.I. 1991/2727); the Statistics of Trade (Customs and Excise) Regulations 1992 (S.I. 1992/2790); the Statistics of Trade (Customs and Excise) (Amendment) Regulations 1993 (S.I. 1993/541); and the Customs and Excise (Transit) Regulations 1993 (S.I. 1993/1353).

All these regulations were made in exercise of powers under section 2(2) of the European Communities Act 1972.

Customs and Excise

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will place in the Library copies of the recruitment leaflets in various Asian languages that were referred to in "News Update", issue No. 20, published in February by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

Sir John Cope: Copies of the brochures are being placed in the Library. They demonstrate the commitment of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise to equal opportunities and are aimed at the parents and advisers of ethnic minority school leavers.

VAT

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is his estimate of the impact on VAT revenues if new residential housing construction was subject to VAT at (a) 5 per cent., (b) 8 per cent. and (c) 17½ per cent. in (i) 1993-94, (ii) 1994-95 and (iii) 1995-96;

(2) what would have been the impact on VAT revenues, if the rate of VAT for (a) new residential house construction and (b) home improvement and repair work had been respectively (i) 17½ per cent., (ii) 8 per cent., (iii) 5 per cent. and (iv) zero per cent. in 1992-93; and what is his estimate of the impact of such changes on VAT revenues in 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96;

(3) what is the expected total revenue from VAT in 1993-94 in respect of (a) all construction work and (b) home improvements and repair work; and what is his forecast for revenue in 1994-95 and 1995-96 from these sources;

(4) if he will publish a table showing the total revenue from VAT in respect of (a) all construction work and (b) home improvement and repair work in each year since 1985-86.

Sir John Cope: No estimates are available for the total revenue yield from all construction or for home improvement and repair work.

The estimates of the revenue yield from applying VAT to new residential house construction for 1992-93 and 1993-94 are as follows:

	1992-93	1993-94
(i) 17½ per cent.	1,800	1,700
(ii) 8 per cent.	800	800
(iii) 5 per cent.	500	500
(iv) 0 per cent.	0	0

No estimates have been made for beyond 1993-94. These estimates are approximate and subject to revision. Also, they make no allowance for the likely behavioural response to changing the rate of VAT applied to these items so the actual revenue effect could differ from the figures shown.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to the rates of VAT currently applicable to (a) new residential housing construction, (b) home improvement and repair work and (c) other construction work in each other country of the EC.

Sir John Cope: The information requested is shown in the table. The data given are the latest available.

[1] The standard rate applies to the sale of new buildings by a person who is a professional building contractor.

[2] The lower rate applies to subsidised housing.

[3] The rates in brackets apply to Madeira and Azores archipelagoes.

[4] The lower rate applies to contracted services relating to the construction of immovable property where the holders of the works contract are either (a) housing and building co-operatives providing that the services are contracted directly between them and the contractor and that the contracted services relating to the construction of the immovable property are performed by companies engaged in building publicly financed dwellings within the scope of the development contracts; or (b) local government agencies, provided that the services in question are contracted directly with the contractor.

[5] Three per cent. applies to dwellings defined administratively as having official protection status under special arrangements, when the supplies are made by the promoters thereof. Six per cent. applies to sales of buildings or parts thereof suitable for use as dwellings, including their garages and outbuildings which are transferred jointly. This excludes business premises, even where the dwellings are transferred jointly with the business premises.

[6] Authorised alterations to listed buildings are zero rated.

Source: VAT in Europe (International Bureau of Fiscal Documentation).

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the latest annual yield of 17·5 per cent. VAT on newspapers, magazines and periodicals.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 22 July 1993]: It is estimated that the yield of VAT at 17·5 per cent. on newspapers, magazines and periodicals would be £1,100 million in 1993-94. This figure does not take account of any behavioural response to applying the standard rate of VAT to these items.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the estimated yield in 1994-95 from levying VAT at 17·5 per cent. on (a) children's clothing, (b) passenger transport, giving separate figures for bus, coach, rail and air transport, (c) food and (d) newspapers and periodicals.

Sir John Cope: Latest estimates available are for 1993-94 and are as follows:

	£ million
(a) Children's clothing	600
(b) domestic passenger transport	1,150
international passenger transport	1,000
(c) food	7,200
(d) books, newspapers and magazines	1,100

Separate estimates have not been made for bus, coach, rail and air transport. Consumers' expenditure data suggests that they comprise respectively, 42 per cent., 44 per cent., 8 per cent. and 6 per cent. of domestic passenger transport. Consumers' expenditure data also suggests that around 87 per cent. of the figure for international passenger transport is in respect of transport by air, and 13 per cent. in respect of transport by sea.

Separate estimates have not been made for newspapers and periodicals. Consumers' expenditure data suggest this may be around 70 per cent. of the total figure for books, newspapers and magazines.

Blind and Partially Sighted People

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements his Department makes to ensure that blind and partially sighted people have access to information produced by his Department where it has not been published in alternative media such as Braille, large print or tape.

Mr. Nelson: No specific arrangements are currently in place but Her Majesty's Treasury will consider sympathetically any request recieved from blind or partially sighted people for access to information it produces. Facilities are available to enable us to produce information in Braille or large print.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his Department's policy on which information produced by his Department is published in alternative media to standard print such as Braille, tape or large print.

Mr. Nelson: No information produced by Her Majesty's Treasury is currently available in this form, but the Department would consider sympathetically any requests for its information to be produced in Braille, tape or large print. Facilities are available for information to be produced in Braille or large print.

Of other Departments for which the Chancellor of the Exchequer has responsibility, the board of Inland Revenue will make available its revised leaflet "You and the Inland Revenue" in Braille, large print and audio rapes. Her Majesty's Customs and Excise are currently considering the possibilities of issuing notice 1—allowances to travellers and the travellers charter in Braille and on audio cassette, and the Department for National Savings is planning to produce an all-in-one product leaflet next year and a tape version will be made available. A tape version of its "Guide to Savings for Non-Taxpayers" was available when that publication was current.

Mr. Nelson: The Department's spend on computer consultancies since 1991-92 to date amounts to £64,220, including VAT. Information on individual consultancies and by task is not held centrally in the same way and cannot be provided except at disproportionate cost.

Agricultural Partnership Tenancies

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) pursuant to his answer of 26 February, Official Report, column 765, when he expects the issue of jurisdictional problems over the valuation of agricultural partnership tenancies to be solved; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many cases relating to the valuation of agricultural partnership tenancies are outstanding with the Lands Tribunal; and when he expects them to be resolved.

Mr. Dorrell: The case referred to in my earlier answer is due to be heard by the Lands Tribunal in early October. No other such cases are currently outstanding with the Lands Tribunal. In future, any such cases reaching the Lands Tribunal after this year's Finance Bill receives Royal Assent should benefit from clause 200 of the Bill, which proposes to allow the special commissioners to refer to the Lands Tribunal questions as to the value of land without the need for a fresh appeal.

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all those services or functions contracted out in Customs and Excise, since November 1991, in which the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were not applied.

Sir John Cope: There have been no cases where Customs and Excise have contracted out existing in-house services where TUPE did not apply. To date, there has been only one contract involving the transfer of staff awarded to an outside bidder, London HQ catering, and the staff were transferred under the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all those services or functions contracted out in Treasury and Treasury agencies, since November 1991, in which the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were not applied.

Mr. Nelson: No previously in-house services have been contracted out since November 1991.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all those services or functions contracted out in Inland Revenue, since November 1991, in which the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were not applied.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is set out in the table:

Records management (off-site store at Nottingham)
Valuation banding for council tax
Bulk mailing (employers' annual pack)
Typing, secretarial and office support services (Nottingham)
Catering (St. Albans)
Catering (Leicester)
Training Office—Writing of Training materials
Estate management (south-east, Wales)
Estate management (Scotland)
Estate management (west midlands, East)
Estate management (London and headquarters)

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Portillo: The Government's economic policies are designed to maintain an environment in which business and enterprise can develop and prosper. The Treasury therefore places a high priority on helping small businesses. Developments in the last year include:

reduction of inflation to 1·2 per cent., its lowest level for nearly 30 years; reductions in interest rates since leaving the exchange rate mechanism which, when fully passed through, will be worth over £5 billion a year off companies' interest payments.

In addition, the March Budget included:

further transitional help on business rates, worth £370 million, so that no business will face a real increase in rates in 1993-94; changes to the loan guarantee scheme to improve the supply of bank finance to small businesses; allowing VAT relief on bad debts after six months rather than a year;

increases in the VAT registration threshold from £36,600 to £37,600 and in the turnover limit of the VAT cash accounting scheme from £300,000 to £350,000; reductions in VAT penalties on late returns and misdeclarations, and new flexibility in applying penalties; a new entrepreneurs' relief from capital gains tax where gains from the sale of a person's own business are reinvested in new businesses, and an extension of capital gains tax retirement relief.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what requests have been received from the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to release frozen funds from banking institutions in London for the purpose of purchasing medical supplies; how many of these requests have been granted; how many have been denied; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The information requested is not readily available. The Bank of England, which administers financial sanctions on behalf of Her Majesty's Treasury, has given delegated authority to individual banks to release funds in respect of the export of humanitarian goods to Serbia and Montenegro from the United Kingdom, provided that a licence has been issued by the Department of Trade and Industry and that a letter of authorisation has been issued by the United Nations sanctions committee.

Nuclear Companies

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what cash contributions he has estimated that British Nuclear Fuels plc, Nuclear Electric and Scottish Nuclear will make to the national loans fund for each year from 1993 to 1998.

Mr. Portillo: No such estimates are available. All three companies may deposit cash surpluses in the national loans fund. But all three also have access to other deposit facilities. They take decisions on where to deposit surpluses from time to time as appropriate.

Inland Revenue

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the organisation of executive officers in the Inland Revenue.

Mr. Dorrell: The Inland Revenue has today announced moves towards a smaller number of large executive offices.

With effect from 1 October 1993, the Controller, Inland Revenue Wales will assume responsibility for Inland Revenue midlands and the two executive offices will be combined and managed as a single executive office from 1 April 1994.

Also from 1 April 1994, the tax offices in London responsible for some of the largest groups of companies, principally in the financial sector, will be brought together in a new executive office, top be known as the large groups office. This office will also incorporate a number of audit and investigative functions currently in the Department's head office.

Responsibility for the remaining tax and collection offices in the three present London regional executive offices will be brought together under a single controller in charge of a new executive office, to be known as Inland Revenue, London.

Budget Council

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the recent meeting of European Ministers at the Budget Council.

Sir John Cope: The Budget Council met in Brussels on 22 July. I represented the United Kingdom.

The council established a first reading draft budget for 1994, totalling 72·4 billion ecu—£55·7 billion—in commitment appropriations and 69·0 billion ecu—£53·1 billion—in payment appropriations, respectively 760 million ecu—£585 million—and 1,088 million ecu—£837 million—below the figures proposed by the Commission in its preliminary draft budget. The draft budget would require own resources totalling 1·18 per cent. of Community gross national product, compared with the own resources ceiling for 1994 of 1·2 per cent.

The draft budget respects the financial perspective expenditure ceilings agreed at the Edinburgh European Council in December 1992. The summary table compares the outcome of the Budget Council to the proposals in the Commission's preliminary draft budget by reference to the financial perspective ceilings.

[1] Throughout this reply the rate of £1 = 1.2994 ecu has been used—the rate notified in the Official Journal as prevailing on the last working day of last month (30 June).

The European Parliament will consider the draft budget for 1994 at its plenary session in October. The Parliament's amendments and modifications will be considered at the second Budget Council in November. The European Parliament's second reading is set for mid-December.

The Council took no formal votes, the presidency concluding that there was the necessary majority to establish the draft budget for 1994.

The Budget Council also considered the Commission's proposed supplementary and amending budget for 1993. It believed that further consideration of the proposal was necessary before any decision could be reached.

Sterling Deposits

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the gross figures for sterling deposits held by financial institutions and banks in (a) the Bahamas, (b) Bermuda, (c) the Grand Cayman islands, (d) the Channel islands and (e) the Isle of Man for the latest year available.

Mr. Nelson [holding annswer 15 July 1993]: Neither the Treasury nor the bank collects this information. The following figures have been supplied by the relevant authorities in the Channel islands, the Isle of Man and the Cayman islands, and cover all banks with a presence in these centres. They do not cover other financial institutions.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 22 July 1993]: The data requested are not available.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Data Processing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the numbers of staff by grade that are employed in his Department and agencies in the automatic data processing functional specialism.

Mr. David Davis: The Cabinet Office, of which the Office of Public Service and Science and its agencies are a part, employs the following numbers of civil servants in automatic data processing posts:

106 senior executive officers
124 higher executive officers
102 executive officers
31 administrative officers
39 administrative assistants

Scientific and Technological Options

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to meet the chairman and secretariat of the European Parliament's scientific and technological options assessment programme to discuss the prospect for collaborative work; and whether his Office of Science and Technology receives copies of the scientific and technological options assessment research reports on a routine basis.

Mr. David Davis: The European Parliament's scientific and technological options assessment programme (STOA) advises the European Parliament on science and technological issues. I do not anticipate developing a programme of collaborative work. Nevertheless, I have instructed my officials to develop closer links with the STOA secretariat to ensure better mutual understanding of science and technology policy issues, and obtain copies of relevant reports.

Central Scrutiny Programme

Mr. Paice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what topics have been covered in the efficiency unit's central scrutiny programme in the last financial year; and which scrutiny reports can be made available to the general public.

Mr. Waldegrave: Fourteen efficiency scrutinies or similar reviews have been undertaken by Departments in 1992-93 in association with the Prime Minister's adviser on efficiency and the efficiency unit. The programme, including those which are not yet completed, is as follows:

Department/Title of Scrutiny Completed	Report: Publicly available

Decisions on the publication of scrutiny reports are taken by the Ministers responsible for the scrutinies concerned. In a number of cases, where a scrutiny has been recently completed or is not yet complete, no decision on publication has been made.

Government Estate

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what will be the terms of reference for the scrutiny of the management of the Government estate.

Mr. Waldegrave: The terms of reference are as follows:

To consider what arrangements would be needed to enable Departments and/or agencies to take as much responsibility as possible for the management, including acquisition and disposal, of all their civil estate properties, including those which are listed buildings.

In particular, to consider:

- What financial and other systems should be retained or established to ensure efficient and effective property management, value for money for the Exchequer and to safeguard the position of Accounting Officers;
- Best public and private sector practice on property management issues;
- What central advice/support is needed for Departments on property management issues, including the employment of consultants; procurement of work services; measures against fraud; standards; health and safety; fire precautions; conservation and environmental issues;
- What co-ordination mechanism would need to be retained or established to ensure the development and implementation of strategic plans for estate rationalisation, to exploit fully Government's strong position in the market place, to make Departments aware of accommodation across Government and to avoid them bidding against each other for properties;
- What arrangements should be retained or established for any Department which cannot approximately take responsibility for the management of their civil estate. To make recommendations.

The Prime Minister has asked his efficiency adviser, Sir Peter Levene, to review how the Government currently manages the properties it occupies, to consider the alternatives for their management and to report to him by the end of the year.

As public service reforms gather pace, it is important to consider whether Departments and agencies should take on more direct responsibility for managing their property, and the means of ensuring that Government property is managed efficiently and effectively to achieve the best value for money for the tax payer.

The scrutiny is being led by a team from the efficiency unit of the OPSS and began work on 19 July. Members will be drawn from other Departments and the private sector. Their report will be published.

EDUCATION

A-levels

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what have been the total numbers of A-level entrants in (a) physics, (b) chemistry, (c) biology, (d) mathematics and (e) other or combined sciences in each year since 1988; and what was the total number of entrants to those subjects each year as a percentage of A-level entrants in all subjects.

Mr. Robin Squire: The exact information requested is not available on a comparable basis for each year since 1988.

The number of candidates aged 18 and below at the beginning of the academic year in schools and further education colleges in England entered for A-level in a (a) physics, (b) chemistry, (c) biology, (d) mathematics and (e) other or combined science in 1991-92 are shown:

(e) Other/combined science	4,749	2·1

GCSE

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what has been the number of GCSE entrants in (a) physics, (b) chemistry, (c) biology, (d) mathematics and (e) combined sciences in each year since 1989; and what has been the total number of entrants in those subjects each year as a percentage of the total entrants in all subjects.

Mr. Robin Squire: The estimated numbers of 16-year-old pupils in schools in England entering GCSE (a) physics, (b) chemistry, (c) biology, (d) mathematics and (e) combined science in each year since 1989 are shown in the table. The percentage of the total entrants are also shown.

School Inspections

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to extend school inspections to cover (a) methods of punishment, (b) complaints procedures, (c) the views of pupils and (d) provision for children with special needs.

Mr. Robin Squire: All inspections of schools must report on quality of education and standards of achievement, financial efficiency and development of pupils' spiritual, moral, cultural and social values. Inspections must be carried out in accordance with the framework of inspection published by the Office for Standards in Education. I have asked Professor Sutherland to write to the hon. Member.

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list all those services or functions contracted out in his Department and agencies, since November 1991, in which the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were not applied.

Mr. Boswell: Whether or not the TUPE regulations apply in any particular case depends on the nature of the work awarded and the contractors' own proposals for carrying it out. TUPE regulations did not apply to either of the Departmental functions contracted out since November 1991—the publications dispatch service and the pilot study of professional scrutiny and control of school building projects.

Blind and Partially Sighted People

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what arrangements his Department makes to ensure that blind and partially sighted people have access to information produced by his Department where it has not been published in alternative media such as Braille, large print or tape.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department ensures that most publications with key messages are available on tape for blind or partially sighted people. We do not make alternative arrangements when this is not practical.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is his Department's policy on which information produced by his Department is published in alternative media to standard print such as Braille, tape or large print.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department ensures that most publications which have important information for parents are made available on tape. It also pays for the Royal National Institute for the Blind to produce the annual booklet "Student Grants and Loans—a brief guide" in Braille.

Medical Training

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proposals he has received for altering the arrangements for training medical, paramedical or other students of subjects principally aimed at careers in the NHS and similar employees.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend has received no general proposals for change in this area. Officials of the Department for Education have held discussions with officials at the Department of Health about the arrangements for funding undergraduate courses in speech and language therapy, dietetics and chiropody. No decisions have yet been reached. Any proposals for change which may emerge from these discussions will be considered in consultation with higher education institutions, professional bodies and the NHS.

Technology Teaching

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what efforts are being undertaken by his Department to secure an increased supply of approximately qualified teachers of technology in schools.

Mr. Forth: The shortage subject bursary scheme for teacher training has included technology since the start. The Open university's postgraduate certificate in education, which the Department has funded, will provide 100 training places a year in technology from February 1994. The school-centred initial teacher training scheme incorporates 100 places available for secondary technology teachers to be organised through the City Technology College Trust. Sixty 20-day designated courses of in-service training for technology will take place in 1993-94, with support under the grants for education support and training (GEST) programme, to enhance primary teachers' subject knowledge. GEST funding can be used for secondary in-service training in technology and other subjects. The Department's teaching taster courses have always featured technology amongst the subjects offered. Special courses have been offered to encourage highly qualified technologists facing redundancy to consider careers in teaching.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what arrangements will be undertaken by his Department to allocate appropriate capitation, resources, workshop facilities and ancillary staff to assist with the teaching of technology in schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Government make unhypothecated grant available to local authorities, which decide on their spending priorities between and within services, or directly to grant-maintained schools. In either case, it is for governing bodies to allocate their funds as they think best between different priorities, including technology. It is not for central Government to prescribe how much should be spent locally on any one area, but in 1993-94 we are making available grants for education support and training support in England for £179 million related to the implementation of the national curriculum generally, of which £30 million is specifically for information technology in schools. The Department is also supporting £24 million of expenditure through the technology schools initiative.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will outline the changes planned by his Department to (a) curriculum materials and (b) testing and examination arrangements following the production of the National Curriculum Council's interim report on the teaching of technology in schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: The present national curriculum requirements for technology will remain in force until revised ones are introduced in respect of pupils in key stages 1 to 3 from the autumn of 1995, and in key stage 4 from the autumn of 1996. My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Education and for Wales will decide towards the end of this year how best to take forward the development of these new curriculum requirements and the arrangements for their implementation, taking into account the findings of Sir Ron Dearing's wider review of the national curriculum and its assessment.

Data Processing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the numbers of staff by grade that are employed in his Department and agencies in the automatic data processing functional specialism.

Mr. Boswell: The number of staff by grade employed in the Department in the automatic data processing functional specialism is as follows:

	Number
SEO	18
HEO	50
EO	66
AO	14
AA	20
Total	168

None is employed in the Teachers' Pensions Agency, although a proportion are employed in account management, developmental and support work for the agency.

Computer Consultancies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list all the computer consultancies employed by his Department and agencies, since November 1991, the tasks for which they were engaged, and the total cost to his Department.

Mr. Forth: This Department has spent an estimated £942,000 on computer consultancies since November 1991. Contracts awarded are as follows:

Education Support Grant

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much education support grant was given to each local education authority for each year since 1979, for health education.

Mr. Forth: Details of allocations for education support grant (ESG) and the parallel LEA training grant (LEATG) for health education are given in the table. The table shows expenditure allocations for ESGs and LEATGs to each LEA as announced in the circular for that year. Final take-up of allocations by LEAs may have been slightly less.

The health education grants began in 1990-91, building on earlier grants to combat drug abuse which began in 1986-87; the footnote to the table gives details of the national total of expenditure supported by these grants.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will give approval for a school opting out of local authority control where a local authority proposes to close that school as part of a review of surplus places.

Mr. Robin Squire: We have made it clear recently that my right hon. Friend would not normally aprove an application for grant-maintained status from a school already proposed for closure as part of a rationalisation scheme, particularly where the school concerned had a large number of surplus places.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the higher education institutions which are providing in-service training for teachers from grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is not collected centrally.

Mrs. Ann Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how long grant-maintained schools will be able to rely on the facility to bring in services from their local education authority once grant-maintained status has been approved.

Mr. Robin Squire: This will vary from authority to authority. There is provision in the current Education Bill to enable grant-maintained schools to trade with LEAs for two years beyond what current legislation allows.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is his policy on officials of his Department participating in meetings for parents or members of the public concerning grant-maintained status other than those meetings organised by his Department.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department's activities in providing information on grant-maintained status are governed by a code of conduct, a copy of which is in the Library. The detailed wording of that code is currently being revised following discussions with the Society of Education Officers, local authority associations and others. Under the code, officials do not normally participate in such meetings.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list those grant-maintained schools about which his Department has received representations from parents about (i) non-admission and (ii) exclusion of their children.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department receives numerous letters and telephone inquiries from parents about matters relating to admission to and exclusion from maintained schools. The Department does not keep a record of every such inquiry.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education in what circumstances his Department will pay head teachers of grant-maintained schools to attend as invited speakers at meetings on grant-maintained status other than at their own schools; and what amount of funding would be paid in those circumstances.

Mr. Robin Squire: Headteachers of grant-maintained schools who are invited to speak at schools considering grant-maintained status about the arrangements for that and their own experiences may claim travel and subsistence expenses from the Department. Such expenses are reimbursed at normal public service rates.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which grant-maintained schools have (a) applied for and (b) been approved to include as part of their admissions policy a process involving (i) pupil and (ii) parent interview; and in which schools the admissions policy has remained unchanged since the school became grant maintained.

Mr. Robin Squire: It is common practice for church schools, whether or not grant maintained, to make use of an interview to help decide whether the religious ethos of the school would be appropriate for the child concerned. Other schools may have arrangements which involve a senior member of staff meeting parents and children prior to admission. Such interviews, which do not affect the child's chance of gaining admission, can be extremely valuable for all concerned. The great majority of grant-maintained schools do not use interviews as part of their formal admission procedures. Relatively few schools have applied for changes in admission arrangements, of whatever kind, since acquiring grant-maintained status.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the amounts of payments made under section 79(3)(a)(iii) of the Education Reform Act 1988 and under sections 79(3)(b) of the Education Reform Act 1988 to grant-maintained schools, giving in each case the name of the school and the purposes of the payments.

Mr. Robin Squire: The only payment that has been made to grant-maintained schools under section 79(3)(a)(iii) of the Education Reform Act 1988 was to Kirkbie Kendal school. The amount was £22,000, and the funds were made available in recognition of extra expenditure incurred by the school on meeting the needs of statemented pupils.

Tables giving the other information requested have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the schools about which his Department has received representations from parents about the conduct of ballots held under section 61 of the Education Reform Act 1988.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department does not collate information on representations received about the conduct of ballots held under section 61 of the Education Reform Act 1988, of which there have now been more than 1,240. Any complaints are considered individually on their merits.

Testing

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the total number of representations he has received about testing in schools so far in 1993; and what was the proportion (a) in favour and (b) against.

Mr. Robin Squire: Since the beginning of the year my right hon. Friend has received about 10,000 letters on the subject of testing in schools. They cover a number of different issues. The Department does not keep statistical information about their content.

Standard Assessment Tasks

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will give the number of schools in each local authority out of the total number of schools in each case which have transmitted SAT results to their education authority.

Mr. Robin Squire: All primary schools maintained by a local education authority are required to send their key stage 1 test results to their authority for onward transmission to the Department. These must be sent to the authority by the end of the summer term. The end date for the authority's returns is 31 July. Secondary schools are required to submit their results through the GCSE examining groups by no later than 15 September. It is, therefore, too soon to have accurate figures on the number of schools that have transmitted their results as required.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 19 July, Official Report, columns 33-36, when the information requested on pupils in schools for 1993 will be available.

Mr. Forth: This information from the January 1993 schools' census will become available towards the end of the year.

Selection

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list those grant-maintained schools which have (a) applied for and (b) been approved to include as part of their admissions policy (i) an element of selection based on pupils' ability or aptitude and (ii) a fully selective system of admissions based upon ability; and if he will list those schools where the admissions policy has remained unchanged since the school became grant maintained.

Mr. Robin Squire: Most grant-maintained schools operate the admissions policies agreed at the time of incorporation. The schools which have subsequently applied for changes in respect of the selection of pupils by aptitude or ability are as follows:

Approved for element of selection
Heathside school, Surrey
Southlands school, Berkshire
Langley Park school, Bromley
Beaverwood school, Bromley
Canterbury high school, Kent
Cooper's school, Bromley
Abbs Cross school, Havering
King Edward VI grammar school, Essex

Approved for fully selective intake
Queen Elizabeth grammar school, Cumbria

Application for element of selection pending
North Kesteven, Lincolnshire
Robert Pattinson school, Lincolnshire
Mill Hill school, Barnet
Budmouth school, Dorset

Application for fully selective intake not approved
Castle Hall school, Kirklees

Surplus School Places

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list for each local education authority the latest estimate of the number of surplus school places in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools.

Mr. Forth: The table shows the number of surplus places in each local authority in England during the academic year 1990-91, the latest available figures. The figures are derived from information provided by LEAs in response to a survey by the Department.

Sex Education

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will require schools to issue guidance to parents who withdraw their children from sex education; and if he will provide schools with a model of such guidance including information on HIV and AIDS and the responsibilities associated with them.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has no powers to require schools to do so. We intend, however, to issue a circular of guidance which will encourage schools to offer support to those parents who do withdraw their children from all or part of sex education in deciding how best to provide their children with the information and guidance they will need.

Student Unions

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what information he has on the number of (a) full-time and (b) part-time staff employed by each campus union in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Boswell: This information is not available centrally.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigration

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons detained under Immigration Act powers applied to his Department to be allowed to depart voluntarily under (a) the supervised departure provisions and (b) the voluntary departure provisions of the immigration rules in each quarter since January 1992.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The readily available information relates to persons subject to deportation action who were removed under the supervised departure procedures, or left voluntarily, and persons dealt with as illegal entrants who left voluntarily. This information is given in the table. Most of these persons will have been detained prior to departure. A number will have been subject to restrictions as an alternative to detention, but such cases could be separately identified only at disproportionate cost.

Doctors (Work Permits)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what are the criteria governing the issue of work permits to doctors from non-EC countries wishing to continue in training grade posts in the NHS after the expiry of their permit-free four-year period; (2) what consideration is given to extending permit-free training status beyond the maximum of four years for hospital training posts undertaken by doctors from non-EC countries.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Under the immigration rules there is no provision for a non-EC national doctor coming here for postgraduate training in a hospital to switch to work permit employment. Where a doctor requires longer than four years to complete his or her postgraduate training, we are prepared to consider, exceptionally, granting further leave to remain on a permit-free basis for a limited period.

Anabolic Steroids

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effect of abuse of anabolic steroids on the incidence of violent crime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs has recently completed a review of the misuse of anabolic steroids, including the available evidence on their behaviourial side effects and the possible link with violent crime. We are currently considering the council's conclusions and recommendations, together with other ministerial colleagues.

Young Runaways

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has of the number of young people aged under 17 years who have run away from home within each police force area in Wales in each year since 1989.

Mr. Maclean: Figures are not available centrally. Limited information on missing persons is contained in the four Welsh forces' chief constables' annual reports.

Bank Customers (Political Views)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will institute an inquiry on the keeping of records regarding the party political views of bank customers; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what assessment he has made of whether the Data Protection Registrar has sufficient funds and staff to initiate a full inquiry into the keeping of records on individuals' party political views by commercial organisations.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is for the Data Protection Registrar to determine whether a breach of the Data Protection Act has occurred in any particular case. I understand that the registrar is making some preliminary inquiries in the banking sector, following the stories which have appeared about the holding of data on political affiliations. He will consider whether further inquiries are appropriate, and what the resource implications of these may be.

Sheehy Report

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many copies of the Sheehy committee report on the police have been distributed free of charge to the police officers and other interested parties; and how much expenditure has been incurred.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A total of 875 copies of the report of the inquiry into police responsibilities and rewards were produced for distribution by the inquiry to interested parties. The chief officer of each police force in the United Kingdom received two copies, as did the clerk to each police authority. Copies were also circulated to each organisation and individual who gave oral evidence to the inquiry. The cost of distribution was £20,000.

Prisons (Racial Discrimination)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many official complaints have been made by prison inmates in England and Wales of racial discrimination being shown or used against them during each of the last three years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the prison service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. D. Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 26 July 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent question about the number of complaints of racial discrimination recorded over the last three years.

Information is not held in the form requested. The request and complaints system does not record racial discrimination as a separate category, nor does it separate out requests from complaints.

Governors are required to record all racial incidents and report them quarterly to Area Managers, and annually in aggregated statistical form. However, the definition of a racial incident goes wider than complaints of racial discrimination and includes, for example, incidents between prisoners and between staff. It is not therefore possible to separate out complaints of racial discrimination from the information available.

Fines (Non-payment)

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many men and women were imprisoned for non-payment of fines for (a) not having television licences and (b) other offences involving fines in the last two years for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information is for 1991. A total of 258 males and 136 females were received into prison service establishments in England and Wales for defaulting on a fine after conviction for operating a television without a licence; and 17,740 males and 840 females were received for fine default following other offences.

Hong Kong

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposal he has to grant full British citizenship to members of non-Chinese ethnic minorities in Hong Kong who will be without a right of abode elsewhere after 1997; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans for new legislation to provide British citizenship for this group. All British members of the non-Chinese ethnic minorities in Hong Kong will be entitled to retain or acquire an appropriate form of British nationality after 1997 and will be assured of full British consular protection. They are guaranteed the right of abode in Hong Kong, and the Government have given an assurance, repeated on many occasions, that if, against all expectations, members of this group came under pressure to leave Hong Kong and had nowhere else to go, the Government of the day would be expected to consider with considerable and particular sympathy their case for admission to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Mark Jarvis

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the report of the Winsom Green prison security department on the suitability of Mark Jarvis for home leave.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the prison service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. D. Lewis to Ms Lynne Jones, dated 26 July 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the publication of the report on the suitability of Mr. Mark Jarvis for home leave.

In considering applications for home leave, the home leave board will receive reports from a number of sources, including staff responsible for security. In the case of Mr. Jarvis, the home leave board considered these reports which, with the exception of the security report, indicated that his recent behaviour was much improved and that he had shown a marked change since arriving at Birmingham in 1991. In view of his history, the board decided that the decision should be deferred and further reports commissioned about the suitability of the place he intended to stay. His good behaviour continued over the next two months and the board was advised that his home leave address was suitable. The social services were also consulted, and his home leave was approved.

The report from the security department at Birmingham had referred to his criminal record, his failure on temporary release the year before and his having been refused four applications for parole. The report was compiled by a prison officer and expressed the view that Mr. Jarvis was not suitable for home leave at the time, but having taken that report into consideration, alongside other reports of a more positive nature, the home leave board decided he should be released.

I am very concerned about any temporary release failure. The procedures were changed in October last year to improve the effectiveness of risk assessment. A further review is currently in progress. I have also written recently to all Governors to remind them of the need for great care before releasing a prisoner for home leave and reminding them to exercise caution in favour of public safety. It is right to refuse any application where there is doubt about a prisoner's likely behaviour while at liberty. Good behaviour in prison is a factor to be taken into account when considering a request for home leave, but the protection of the public has to be the overriding factor.

Alcohol

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many persons under the age of 18 years were found guilty or cautioned for buying intoxicating liquor within each police force area in Wales in each of the last three years; and how many licensees were found guilty or cautioned for selling intoxicating liquor to persons aged under 18 years;

(2) how many children and young people under the age of 18 years have been found guilty or cautioned for offences of drunkenness within each police force area in Wales in each of the last three years.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is given in the tables. Data for 1992 will not be available until the autumn.

Blind and Partially Sighted People

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's policy on which information produced by his Department is published in alternative media to standard print such as Braille, tape or large print.

Mr. Howard: Our criteria are to target publicity material in alternative media, according to need, within available funding. My Department currently makes available the following:

"Fire Safety Advice for Disabled People" in 18 pt bold type.

"Fire Safety in the Home" audio cassette.

"Practical Ways to Crack Crime—Family Version" audio cassette.

We have not produced any material in Braille.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements his Department makes to ensure that blind and partially sighted people have access to information produced by his Department where it has not been published in alternative media such as Braille, large print or tape.

Mr. Howard: Publicity material produced by the Home Office is available, free of charge, to the public from relevant local services such as police forces and fire brigades. Blind and partially-sighted people can obtain such material by contacting those services.

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all those services or functions contracted out in his Department and agencies, since November 1991, in which the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were not applied.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Whether or not the regulations apply in any particular case will depend on the nature of the work awarded and the contractors' own proposals for carrying it out. The replies of 9 March at column 476 and 18 June at column 753 listed the areas of the Home Office which have been contracted out. The regulations did not apply to the following:

Management of Wolds prison
Management of Blakenhurst prison
Court escort and custody services in Humberside and the east midlands
Catering services (Downview, Belmarsh, Bullingdon, Holme House, Woodhill, Highdown and Lancaster Farms)
Forensic Science Service waste disposal

Information concerning whether the regulations applied to any other Home Office services for which contracts have been awarded since November 1991 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Wandsworth Prison

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the building projects and their cost now being undertaken at Wandsworth prison as of 16 July.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the prison service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. D. Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 26 July 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the building projects, and their cost, now being undertaken at Wandsworth prison.

After completion of the modernisation of D Wing in March 1993, at a cost of £5·5 million, enabling works are under way to allow the modernisation of C Wing. The enabling works (including the removal of asbestos and electrical wiring) will be completed in September 1993, at an estimated cost of £175,000. Work on the 15 month refurbishment of C Wing will then commence in September 1993, at an estimated cost of £7·15 million.

Jason Georgiou

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of custody for Jason Georgiou; for what period he was held in custody; and if he will list the prosecution witnesses.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the prison service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. D. Lewis to Mr. Peter Bottomley, dated 26 July 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the costs of holding Jason Georgiou in custody and the period for which he was held.

Jason Georgiou was held at Belmarsh Prison from 27 October 1992 until 30 April 1993 when he was transferred to Brixton Prison where he remained until his release on 12 July 1993.

We do not collect costs of individual prisoners, but the average cost of holding a person in custody for this period in local and remand prisons would have been £17,197 at 93/4 prices.

I regret that we are unable to furnish you with details of the prosecution witnesses in the case since the Lord Chancellors Department have advised that none of them were called to give evidence and therefore their details are not a matter of public record.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Howard: The Government continue to help small businesses, through improvements to the business climate, through deregulation and through specific programmes of support and assistance.

During the past 12 months my Department has substantially increased the resources it devotes to taking forward the Government's deregulation initiative and has taken a number of steps to help small businesses. We have proposed legislation which aims to clarify the law on Sunday trading; we have withdrawn draft fire regulations which representatives of some small businesses feared would be unduly burdensome and we are preparing new regulations which take account of these concerns; we have undertaken consultation exercises on greyhound racing and liquor licensing; and we have set in hand a full review of all regulations affecting business for which the Home Office has responsibility. We propose to remove the restrictions on weekday shop opening hours in England and Wales (and throughout the week in Scotland) as soon as parliamentary time permits.

The main deregulatory achievements in 1991 were in betting and gaming. The greyhound industry was given greater flexibility to set deductions according to market forces by increasing from 17·5 per cent. to 29 per cent. the maximum permitted amount which may be retained by the operators of a totalisator on a dog racecourse. Gaming clubs were allowed to increase from one to two the number of multiple bingo games that can be played on a Saturday.

The target is to complete the current review of Home Office regulations by April 1994. Targets have also been set for other work such as consultative exercises and developing proposals for legislation. In addition the Home Office will contribute to the Department of Trade and Industry's central record of Government regulations against which progress on deregulation is being monitored.

The work on deregulation complements continuing efforts to assist firms who wish to bid for Home Office business. Over the last 12 months we have again revised and reissued a booklet entitled "Selling to the Home Office" which details the Home Office's purchasing needs and gives specific contact points for initial approaches. A central contact point for general enquiries is also available. It is Home Office policy to give encouragement and assistance to small businesses wherever possible. The Home Office does not hold statistical information regarding the volume of business placed with small firms.

Drug Addicts

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many drug addicts in Wales notified to his Department are aged under 21 years; and how many of them are (a) female and (b) male.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is contained in tables A9 and A10 of the Home Office statistical bulletin "Statistics of drug addicts notified to the Home Office, United Kingdom, 1992" (area tables), a copy of which is in the Library.

Ethnic Minorities (Employment)

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 8 June, Official Report, columns 178-80, how many letters of representation regarding proposed cuts in funding under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 he has received from, or on behalf of, (a) school governing bodies, (b) schools, (c) other educational institutions and (d) parents and other individuals.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The numbers are:
(a) 119; (b) 192; (c) 10; (d) 311.

Computer Consultancies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all the computer consultancies employed by his Department and agencies, since November 1991, the tasks for which they were engaged, and the total cost to his Department.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Home Office has committed approximately £4·5 million to 186 computer consultancy contracts let since 1 November 1991. During this period the statistical database has been automated and the tasks are not recorded in a manner which enables a general description to be provided without incurring disproportionate cost. Uninsured Vehicles

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were prosecuted for driving an uninsured vehicle in 1992.

Mr. Maclean: A total of 364,035 proceedings were taken in England and Wales in 1991 for the offence of "using a motor vehicle vehicle uninsured against third party risks".

The number involved is likely to be less because some may have been proceeded against for more than one of these offences.

Figures for 1992 are not yet available.

Police Computer System

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the designated computer system for the police national criminal intelligence service will be ready.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The interim computer system which is currently used by the National Criminal Intelligence Service is expected to be replaced early in 1995.

Traffic Offences and Burglaries

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) traffic offences and (b) burglaries were recorded in (i) 1980 and (ii) 1992.

Mr. Maclean: Figures for the number of notifiable offences recorded by the police are published annually in the Home Office Bulletin "Notifiable Offences, England and Wales". They include offences of burglary, causing death by reckless driving and (from April 1992) causing death by aggravated vehicle-taking. All other traffic offences are not notifiable. However, statistics giving the action taken for offences relating to motor vehicles (written warnings, vehicle defect rectification scheme notices, fixed penalty notices and court proceedings) are published annually in Home Office Statistical Bulletin "Motor Offences, England and Wales", although 1992 figures have not yet been published. Copies of these publications are in the Library.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the amount of police time that is spent on traffic control compared with burglary prevention and investigation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a number of representations from hon. Members and from the public in the last 12 months about the time spent by the police on traffic control as opposed to dealing with other crime matters. The police have a key role in the enforcement of traffic legislation. The deployment of police officers to meet the various duties undertaken by the police is an operational matter for individual chief officers of police.

Data Processing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the numbers of staff by grade that are employed in his Department and agencies in the automatic data processing functional specialism.

Mr. Howard: The information is as follows:

Grade	Number
Administrative assistant	83
Administrative officer	79
Executive officer	202
Higher executive officer	176
Higher professional and technology officer	1
Senior executive officer	94
Total	635

Prison Population

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the latest figures for the total prison population; and what those figures were in 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the prison service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. D. Lewis to Mr. Jim Callaghan, dated 26 July 1993:

The Secretary of State has asked me to write to you directly in reply to your Parliamentary Question about the latest figures for the total prison population and what those figures were in 1990, 1991 and 1992.

The prison population was 44,901 on 23 July. The figures for 30 June each year between 1990 and 1993 are shown in the attached table.

Prison population, England and Wales: 1990—1993

Date	Number of persons[2]
30 June 1990	45,466
30 June 1991	45,626
30 June 1992	46,832
30 June 1993[1]	44,225

[1] Provisional figure.
[2] Includes prisoners held in police cells (943 in 1990, 872 in 1991, 1,346 in 1992 and none in 1993).

Neighbourhood Watch

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many neighbourhood watch schemes now exist in England and Wales.

Mr. Charles Wardle: According to the latest information available, there were over 115,000 neighbourhood watch schemes in England and Wales at the end of December 1992. These schemes covered some 5 million households.

Police, Newham

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the reasons for the reduction in numbers of police officers in the London borough of Newham in the last year.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Deployment of personnel within the Metropolitan police is a matter for the commissioner, but I understand that the reduction is due to civilianisation of some posts, employment of the manpower allocation formula at area level affecting manpower available to divisions, and the transfer of responsibility for court staff, and Whitehall security staff, from division to area or headquarters.

Road Tax Evasion

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were prosecuted for road tax evasion offences in each year since 1989.

Mr. Maclean: The following table shows the number of proceedings taken in England and Wales in the years 1989 to 1991 for the offence of "motor vehicle licence—failing to pay appropriate duty":

	Number
1989	166,575
1990	160,731
1991	174,828

The number of people involved is likely to be less because some of them may have been prosecuted against for more than one of these offences.

Figures for 1992 are not yet available.

Victim Support Schemes

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many victim support schemes now operate in England and Wales.

Mr. Maclean: I understand there are some 360 local victim support schemes and branches in England and Wales. In addition there are 36 schemes operating in the Crown court as the Crown court witness service of Victim Support.

Traffic Offences and Burglaries

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he collects about the priorities exercised by each police constabulary in allocating resources to (a) traffic offences and (b) burglary.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many fatal stabbings have been recorded by each police constabulary in each of the past five years.

Mr. Maclean: The table shows the number of offences currently recorded as homicide involving the use of a sharp instrument in England and Wales for the years 1987 to 1991:

Secured by Design Initiative

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to promote the Secured by Design initiative.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Secured by Design is a police initiative which has had the Government's full support since its inception, and we publish publicity material promoting its merits. The initiative will be further promoted in forthcoming guidance to local planning authorities on crime prevention to be issued by the Department of the Environment in consultation with the Home Office.

Dog Breeders

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria local authorities must use when considering applications or renewal of licences for dog breeders.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Applications for licences for dog breeders are considered against the criteria set out in Section 1(4) of the Breeding of Dogs Act 1973.

Violent Crime

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he plans to take to curb the increase in violent crimes.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to his question on 7 June 1993 at column 76.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were convicted for possession of a knife in public without good reason in each of the last five years.

Mr. Maclean: Information available centrally, which is given in the table, relating to the number of persons found guilty for possession of knives under the Prevention of Crime Act 1953 section 1, and the Criminal Justice Act 1988, section 139 for the years 1987 to 1991. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many bail hostels, and how many bail hostel places, are situated in each police authority area in England and Wales; and how many additional places the Government aims to provide by 1995 in each police authority area.

Mr. Maclean: There are bail hostels in 20 police authority areas as listed:

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the bail hostels and combined probation and bail hostels in England and Wales currently operated by voluntary organisations; and what target he has set for increasing this number by 1995.

Prison Ships

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what companies his Department has been in contact with regarding the proposal to moor prison ships in Birkenhead and Barrow;

(2) what timetable he is considering for the possible establishment of floating prisons;

(3) what is the estimated cost of hiring staffing and maintaining prison ships in the Wallasey or Birkenhead docks.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the prison service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. D. Lewis to Ms Angela Eagle, dated 26 July 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about prison ships.

Maritime detention facilities are one of the options being considered as part of a Prison Service contingency planning exercise. This exercise is intended to identify options for coping with levels of prisoner population that exceed the available accommodation. A number of sites with the necessary docking facilities are being reviewed, but no decision has been taken on the feasibility of this option.

As consideration of the option is at such an early stage, it is not possible to give the details of costs. Nor have there been any decisions on which companies could supply the accommodation.

As the contacts so far have been of a very preliminary nature and any decision to proceed with this option might involve a competitive tender, details of individual companies interested could not properly be revealed at this stage.

Fines

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money was levied in fines after convictions under the criminal law for each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; what amounts were actually collected in fines paid for each year; and in aid of which vote fines collected for breaches of the criminal law are appropriated.

Mr. Maclean: Information on the amount of fines imposed at all courts following conviction under criminal law for the years 1986, 1989, 1990 and 1991 is given in the table. Comparable data for years prior to 1986 and for 1987 and 1988 are unavailable. It is not possible to identify fines separately from other similar receipts such as confiscation orders, forfeit bail sureties or magistrates' courts fees. All monies collected from magistrates' courts are surrendered direct to the Consolidated Fund and are not appropriated in aid of any vote.

Empty Homes

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, by (a) location and (b) region, the empty homes in the ownership of his Department which are (i) vacant for security reasons, (ii) vacant awaiting redevelopment, (iii) vacant for demolition and (iv) surplus.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of vacant residential properties owned by the Department as at 1 April 1993 was as follows:

	Number
(a) Retained for redevelopment or security reasons	70
(b) Retained for essential reallocation	86
(c) To be demolished	50
(d) Surplus and on the open market for sale	86
Total	292

The above figures do not include properties owned by the Metropolitan police or other police authorities.

Listing by locations is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the cost of administering the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board for each of the last five years; and what was the ratio of these costs to the amount paid out in claims;

(2) what was the total number of claims made to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board in each of the last five years; and what proportion were paid out within (a) three, (b) six, (c) nine, (d) 12 and (e) over 12 months.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is summarised in the table. Fuller details can be found in the published annual reports of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board. Copies are held in the Library of the House.

Financial year	Applications made	Compensation paid £ million	Administration costs £ million	Total costs £ million	Administration as percentage	Percentage of cases resolved within months 3	6	9	12	Over 12

Note: The percentage relating to cases resolved do not necessarily relate to claims received in that year. The figures for 1992-93 are provisional at this stage.

Prisoners (Drugs)

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to improve community care assessment arrangements for drug misusing prisoners remanded in custody or sentenced.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. D. Lewis to Mr. Tim Rathbone, dated 26 July 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent question about plans to improve community care assessment arrangements for drug misusing prisoners remanded in custody or sentenced.

The arrangements for assessment for community care for people in contact with the Criminal Justice System were published recently in Home Office Circular 29/1993. A copy of this Circular is enclosed, it is also available in the library. We are currently undertaking a review of services provided for drug misusers in prison with the aim of producing a comprehensive strategy to address drug misuse. Preparation for discharge and aftercare arrangements will be included in this review.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he is taking in his review of electoral registration procedures to address the difficulties experienced by homeless people in registering to vote.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: As part of our post-election review, the electoral registration working group recently met representatives of the Church of England, the Salvation Army, Shelter and CHAR—the campaign for the homeless and rootless—to discuss the difficulties experienced by homeless people in registering as electors. We intend to hold further discussions later in the year.

Football Pools

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from Vernons Pools about the sale of pools coupons through retail outlets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The managing director of Vernons Pools wrote to me earlier this month about the timing of the commencement of clause 56 of the National Lottery Etc., Bill which will remove the prohibition on the use of premises for the delivery of football pools coupons and stakes. In order to ensure that the national lottery is not disadvantaged, we intend to defer the commencement of clause 56—and indeed of the other provisions of part IV of the Bill—until the launch of the lottery.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Wind Power

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to commence a tendering process to construct a demonstration offshore wind farm.

Mr. Eggar: I have no plans to construct a demonstration offshore wind farm.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to allow community-based wind power schemes to advertise for local investment; and if he will seek to place a statutory duty on local authorities to identify suitable sites for such developments.

Mr. Eggar: I am not aware of any impediment to community-based wind power schemes advertising for local investment. Planning Policy Guidance Note 22: Renewable Energy advises local authorities to include renewables in their development plan and provides guidance on how this should be done. It includes an annex on wind power.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to make an announcement of when wind power developers can next apply for contracts under the non-fossil fuel obligation; and if he will make a statement concerning the procedure for the award of such contracts.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 21 July to the hon. Member for Cambridgeshire, North-East (Mr. Moss), Official Report, column 339.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy that the next tranche of wind power contracts should be for not less than 700 MW.

Mr. Eggar: I currently expect to make the third renewable energy order under the non-fossil fuel obligation for approximately 300 to 400 MW of new capacity in total but will review this in light of the quality and cost of proposals received. I am considering a separate band for wind power within that total.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what amount of money was allocated to Government sponsored research and development for renewable energy which is non-nuclear and does not involve the production of energy through waste incineration in each year since 1987.

Mr. Eggar: The amount of Government expenditure on research and development for renewable energy, not involving the production of energy through waste incineration, in each year since 1987 is as follows:

Year	Spend (£ millions)
1987-88	16·2
1988-89	15·8
1989-90	17·7
1990-91	20·5
1991-92	23·1
1992-93	23·6

The allocation for 1993-94 is estimated at £22·6 million.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to ensure that all contracts for renewable energy under the non-fossil fuel obligation are for a minimum of 10 years beginning from the date of commissioning the projects.

Mr. Eggar: My intention is that the third renewables order will run for 15 to 20 years as from November 1994. This will allow the public electricity suppliers to offer generators contracts for a similar period.

Energy from Waste

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of non-nuclear contracts granted under the non-fossil fuel obligation have been given to companies involved in the generation of energy through waste incineration in each year since 1987.

Mr. Eggar: Under the 1990 Non-Fossil Fuel Obligation Renewables Order, seven out of 75 renewables contracts went to waste incineration projects. Under the 1991 order 14 out of 122 contracts went to waste incineration projects.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the companies which have been given moneys under the non-fossil fuel obligation for the generation of energy through waste incineration in each year since 1990 indicating (a) the name of the company, (b) the location of the incinerators, (c) the amount of money awarded for each project and (d) the amount of electricity in megawatts generated by each project.

Mr. Eggar: (a) and (b): The names, locations and capacities of waste incineration projects which received contracts under the 1990 and 1991 non-fossil fuel obligation renewables orders are as follows:

Generator name	Location	Capacity (MW DNC)
1990 projects
Isle of Wight county council	Newport	2
Energy Supplies Ltd.	Newcastle upon Tyne	3
North London Waste Authority	Edmonton/London	27
Coventry City council	Coventry	8
Elm Energy UK	Wolverhampton	20
Fibropower Ltd.	Diss, Suffolk	13
Fibropower Ltd.	Scunthorpe, Humberside	13
1991 projects
Babcock Power Investments Ltd.	Portsmouth	33
British Coal	Nottingham	7
Cory Environmental Ltd.	Belvedere, Kent	103
Derbyshire county council	Raynesway	7
Energy Supplies Ltd.	Pebsham, East Sussex	4
National Power	Northfleet, Kent	44
SELCHP Ltd.	London	25
Southampton Geothermal Heating	Southampton	5
Wessex Waste Management	Avonmouth, Bristol	23
Yorkshire Renewable Energy Ltd.	Knotstrop, Leeds	21
Adams Integrated Waste Ltd.	Wolverhampton	8
Agrigen Ltd.	Northampton	8
Northumbrian Services Ltd.	Gateshead, Tyne and Wear	1
Slough Estates	Slough	13

(c): The contract prices awarded to projects under the 1990 order varied, and are commercially confidential. Under the 1991 order, waste incineration projects in the "Municipal and General Industrial Waste" band receive a premium of 6·55 p/kWh; while those in the "Other" band receive a premium of 5·9 p/kWh.

(d): The amount of electricity generated by all projects is commercially confidential.

Biogas and Hydroelectric Schemes

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what efforts are currently undertaken by his Department to encourage the development of biogas schemes and smaller hydroelectric schemes.

Mr. Eggar: My Department's renewable energy programme aims to stimulate the development of renewable sources of energy which have prospects of being economically competitive and environmentally acceptable. The non-fossil fuel obligation is stimulating an initial market. Biogas and small scale hydro are being supported under both the research programme and the non-fossil fuel obligation.

Regional Electricity Companies

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) when the details of the contracts for the non-fossil fuel obligations of the regional electricity companies will be announced;

(2) what will be the intended length of contracts under the new contracts for the non-fossil fuel obligations of the regional electricity companies.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the document which I placed in the Libraries of both Houses giving details of the proposed arrangements of the third renewables order under the non-fossil fuel obligation, to which I referred in my reply of 21 July to the hon. Member for Cambridgeshire, North-East (Mr. Moss) Official Report, column 339. My intention is that the third order will run for 15 to 20 years as from November 1994, which will allow the public electricity suppliers to offer generators contracts for a similar period.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Pembroke (Mr. Ainger), Official Report, 20 July, column 126, what were the dates over which the vitrified high-level waste was delivered to Japan, the mode of transport used, the quantity involved and the location to which it was sent in Japan.

Mr. Eggar: The operational details are a matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc and its customer in Japan.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment has been made of Russian technical capacity to process nuclear waste.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 8 July 1993]: British Nuclear Fuels plc is in discussion with the Russian Ministry of Atomic Power on the management of that country's nuclear waste. I understand that the parties have identified a number of areas in which collaboration between them can usefully take place and that they have agreed to meet on a regular basis.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress has been made in conducting a study with BNFL on financial consequences of abandoning THORP, including the alternative use of already committed capital investment for the interim storage of contracted foreign spent fuel, as recommended in the First report of the Environment Committee of Session 1985-86, HC 191, on radioactive waste; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The Government did not accept the recommendation in question.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assurances overseas customers using the thermal oxide reprocessing plant have given that they will accept returns of high-level waste in accordance with the substitution principle; if Government approval of the principle will be conditional on such assurances; and what assessment he has made of the extent of facilities in recipient countries to provide adequate storage for such waste.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 23 July 1993]: The Government's consideration of the proposal by British Nuclear Fuels plc to return nuclear waste by substitution has not yet been completed. Should substitution be approved, it would be for the company to negotiate appropriate arrangements with its customers within guidelines set by the Government. Customers who did not wish to accept substitution on a basis acceptable to the United Kingdom would be required to take delivery of all three waste streams—high, intermediate and low-level waste.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has about the comparative costs of transporting intermediate-level waste arising from the reprocessing of foreign spent nuclear fuel at the thermal oxide reprocessing plant back to customer countries against storing the intermediate-level waste in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 23 July 1993]: This is a commercial matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc and its overseas customers.

Atomic Energy Authority

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress has been made in meeting his target to ensure the first phase of work on options for the future of the AEA is completed by late autumn.

Mr. Eggar: The consultancy study I announced on 1 April, Official Report, column 407, is progressing to schedule. An announcement will be made in due course, once I have had an opportunity to consider the consultants' report and the AEA's own views.

Nuclear Safety (CIS)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the progress made in establishing a training seminar for nuclear safeguards experts from the Commonwealth of Independent States republics.

Mr. Eggar: In collaboration with BNFL and AEA my Department has to date arranged and funded three safeguards seminars for experts from the CIS Republics. Two of these were attended by personnel from the Russian Federation and concentrated on safeguards approaches for reprocessing plants, the third dealt with safeguards for fuel fabrication plants and fast reactors and included participants from the Republic of Kazakhstan in addition to the Russian Federation. A further two seminars are planned for the autumn.

Nuclear Industry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 19 July, Official Report, column 13, on what occasions in regard to what nuclear materials the European Commission has granted a derogation under article 22 of EC Regulation 3227/76 for nuclear exports from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: Derogation from reporting has been granted to the Science museum, South Kensington, London for uranium and thorium specimens.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimates he has of the surpluses expected to be generated by Nuclear Electric, Scottish Nuclear and British Nuclear Fuel's operations from 1993 to 1998; and what restrictions he intends to place on their use.

Mr. Eggar: The profitability of Nuclear Electric, Scottish Nuclear and BNFL over the period 1993-98 will depend on a number of factors, many of which are inevitably uncertain. In their role as shareholder, the Government undertake appropriate monitoring of the companies' expenditure plans.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what the increase in liabilities would be for British Nuclear Fuels, Scottish Nuclear and Nuclear Electric if discounting is not applied to nuclear provisions.

Mr. Eggar: These are matters for the companies concerned.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what research has been undertaken to verify that the two per cent. discount rate applied to nuclear liabilities by United Kingdom nuclear companies correctly balances the risks and benefits between current and future generations.

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for the nuclear companies.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on progress in making his target in implementation of extended reporting of nuclear materials and equipment by August 1993.

Mr. Eggar: The submission of confidential returns has begun.

Nuclear Emergencies

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress has been made in his target to develop by August a strategy for use of the radioactive incident monitoring network in a United Kingdom emergency through integration into the existing nuclear emergency briefing room procedures.

Mr. Eggar: Radioactive incident monitoring network equipment has been installed within the nuclear emergency briefing room and Department of Trade and Industry staff have participated in testing and demonstration of the system. Agreement has been reached in general terms on how it will be integrated into nuclear emergency briefing room procedures when the radioactive incident monitoring network phase 2 comes on stream towards the end of this year.

Advanced Gas-cooled Reactor Fuel

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions his Department has had with (a) British Nuclear Fuels Limited, (b) Costain Engineering or (c) Nuclear Electric regarding plans on construction of a dry store for spent advanced gas-cooled reactor fuel.

Mr. Eggar: My Department discusses a range of topics with these companies.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what response he has made to the letter sent to the Minister for Energy on 5 July by the chairman of the Consumers Union of Japan relating to THORP.

Mr. Eggar: The letter arrived on 19 July. I shall be replying in due course.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects THORP to be commissioned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Before commissioning its thermal oxide reprocessing plant, British Nuclear Fuels plc will need such consents and authorisations as may be required by law. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment announced on 28 June, Official Report, column 392, there is to be a further round of consultation. This is expected to start shortly and to last for two months. Final decisions will be taken following this further period of consultation.

Uranium

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the price per tonne of uranium in 1977, adjusted to 1993 prices; what was the projected price for 1993 given in the Windscale inquiry report; what is the current cost per tonne of uranium; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The Euratom Supply Agency's report for 1992 shows that the average price of natural uranium deliveries made during the year under multiannual contracts to the electricity utilities of the European Community or their procurement organisations was 49·50 ecu per kilogramme of uranium. The agency's 1977 report did not provide a comparable figure for that year because of uncertain conditions in the market. Illustrative prices for uranium were mentioned in chapter 9 of the Windscale inquiry report.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much uranium separated by reprocessing at Sellafield over the last 40 years has been used in reactors (a) by weight and (b) as percentage of total uranium produced.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Clydesdale (Mr. Hood) on 20 July 1993, Official Report, columns 127-28.

Environmentally Friendly Fuel Technology

Mr. Robathan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action has been taken following the representations the former Department of Energy received from the Director General of Electricity Supply about the inclusion of environmentally friendly technologies, including such as combined heat and power, in the non-fossil fuel obligation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I understand that the then Secretary of State for Energy took full account of his consultations with the Director General of Electricity Supply when making the 1990 and 1991 renewables orders under the non-fossil fuel obligation. Both orders are supporting projects with the potential for combined heat and power. On 21 July I announced a third renewables order under the non-fossil fuel obligation. I would expect projects with the potential for combined heat and power to bid into this order also.

Oil Exploration

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how the environmental interests of the coast are safeguarded during the oil exploration licensing procedure.

Mr. Eggar: The Department of Trade and Industry consults other Government Departments, the joint Nature Conservation Committee and local advisory groups before offering any blocks for licensing. The JNCC in turn consults English Nature, the Countryside Council for Wales, Scottish Natural Heritage and the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds.

Blocks that are offered for licensing in sensitive areas such as those close to the coast are subject to special conditions to protect wildlife and the environment. These conditions are agreed with relevant Government Departments and the JNCC.

The conditions include consultation with JNCC and other environmental organisations before the licensee undertakes operations; seasonal restrictions to protect wildlife; a ban on drilling within three miles of the coast; the use of zero-discharge rigs and water-based drilling muds; and to agree with the advisory bodies and local authorities plans to be put into effect in case of an oil spill.

Depleted Uranium

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade to which foreign defence industries the British nuclear industry supplies depleted uranium.

Mr. Eggar: All shipments of depleted uranium are made in accordance with the provisions of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1992. It has been the policy of successive Administrations not to make public the details of specific export licence applications. In assessing all such applications the Government take into account the United Kingdom's obligations under the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what publicly financed grants are available to scientists and entrepreneurs for research into and development of renewable energy technology.

Mr. Eggar: My Department operates a research and development programme on renewable energy. Financial assistance may be available to appropriate projects. Interested parties should contact:

Enquiry Bureau
Energy Technology Support
Harwell Laboratory
Oxfordshire
OX11 ORA

Pharmaceuticals

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the volume and value of exports of anthrax vaccine in each year since 1985

Mr. Needham: The information requested is not available from official sources because the United Kingdom trade classification does not separately identify anthrax vaccines. The manufacturers of anthrax vaccines in the United Kingdom report no exports during the last five years. Information prior to that could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

KONVER Programme

Dr. David Clark: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Barrow and Furness (Mr. Hutton), of 14 June, Official Report, columns 409-10, which bodies have been consulted for their views on the draft United Kingdom programme for the KONVER scheme; and what is the planned size of the draft United Kingdom programme.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answwer 23 July 1993]: The United Kingdom KONVER programme will request 20·12 million ecu, which is the full amount allocated to the United Kingdom for 1993.

Consultation on the draft programme will proceed during August, and will include the training and enterprise councils, the local enterprise companies, the local authority associations, and the Rural Development Commission.

Blind and Partially Sighted People

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what arrangements his Department makes to ensure that blind and partially sighted people have access to information produced by his Department where it has not been published in alternative media such as Braille, large print or tape;

(2) what is his Department's policy on which information produced by his Department is published in alternative media to standard print such as Braille, tape or large print.

Mr. Eggar: The Department's information materials are freely available. We are not aware of widespread demand for them to be separately prepared for blind and partially sighted people, but the need for such provision is kept under review.

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list all those services or functions contracted out in his Department and agencies, since November 1991, in which the Transfer or Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were not applied.

Mr. Eggar: In my Department no services or functions have been contracted out where the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations were relevant. Collection of information on all contracts where TUPE was not applicable would incur disproportionate costs.

Data Processing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the numbers of staff by grade that are employed in his Department and agencies in the automatic data processing functional specialism.

Mr. Eggar: The Department and its agencies employ the following staff in the automatic data processing functional specialism:

	Number
Senior Executive Officer	61
Higher Executive Officer	136
Executive Officer	156

Computer Consultants

Mr. McAllion: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list all the computer consultancies employed by his Department and agencies, since November 1991, the tasks for which they were engaged, and the total cost to his Department.

Mr. Eggar: My Department does not classify consultancies in terms of their activity and collection of this information would incur disproportionate costs.

Zinc

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what recent representations he has received concerning distortions in the world trade in zinc ash and residue, zinc dross, unwrought zinc, and zinc waste and scrap; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what information he has concerning the tariffs, duties, taxes and other barriers to imports faced by those attempting to import zinc ash and residue, zirc dross, unwrought zinc, and zinc waste and scrap to and from India; and what representations he has made to the Indian

Government, to the European Community, or through the general agreement on tariffs and trade negotiating process about those barriers;

(3) what steps he is taking to bring about free and fair trade in zinc ash and residue, zinc dross, unwrought zinc, and zinc waste and scrap;

(4) what information he has concerning the net balance of trade in terms of volume and value between the United Kingdom and India in zinc ash and residue, zinc dross, unwrought zinc, and zinc waste and scrap.

Mr. Sainsbury: I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Defence Industry (Reduction)

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what steps he is taking to ensure that assistance from the European Community can be targeted to those communities which have suffered directly the greatest impact of reduced demand in the level of defence procurement regardless of whether or not they have assisted area status or are suffering overall regional or industrial decline;

(2) if he will make a statement providing details of the European Community KONVER programme for assistance to areas affected by reduced demand in the defence industries; whether assistance through this programme is available only to projects in locations with assisted area status or is more widely available; and what steps he is taking to ensure that the north west of England benefits from this programme.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answers 13 July 1993]: Those areas which are within an objective 2 area will be eligible for assistance for activities supported by the European regional development fund within the KONVER scheme.

Moreover the conclusions reached at the Foreign Affairs Council on 2 and 3 July on the regulations on the future of European structural funds, confirmed by the Council on 19 and 20 July, enable member states to make available to areas not designated for objective 1, 2 or 5b a limited part of the European regional development fund contribution to KONVER. The Government intend to make use of this new flexibility in the United Kingdom's 1993 KONVER programme.

All areas affected by the reduction in defence expenditure will be eligible for support under the European social fund part of the scheme.

Eligibility for the structural funds is not affected by assisted area status.

Plutonium

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how the value and cost of plutonium owned by United Kingdom nuclear companies is treated for accounting purposes.

Mr. Eggar: This is a commercial matter for the companies concerned.

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what use he intends to make of consultants in the forthcoming nuclear review; and what safeguards he intends to institute in respect of auditors of companies in the nuclear industry who tender for consultancy contracts associated with the review to ensure no conflict of interest occurs.

Mr. Eggar: No decisions have yet been taken on the scope, timing and format of the nuclear review, or on whether consultants will be employed. A further announcement will be made in due course.

WALES

Unemployment

Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to assist areas with rising unemployment, in particular areas of high concentrations of defence-related industry; what special programmes are available for such areas; and what plans he has to increase such assistance.

Mr. Redwood: The assisted area review took into account future rundowns, including those arising from reductions in defence expenditure. As a result the Haverfordwest and Fishguard travel-to-work areas have been upgraded to development area status to assist further in the work taken forward through the west Wales task force.

Youth Organisations

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the national voluntary youth organisations within Wales currently in receipt of funding from his Department, indicating when each organisation was informed of their grant levels for the current year.

Sir Wyn Roberts: There are 15 youth organisations currently in receipt of grant, namely the Boys Brigade, Baptist Youth Ministry, Church in Wales, Guides Cymru, Gwerin y Coed (Woodcraft Folk), the Order of St. John, Phab (Wales), United Nations Association International Youth Services, United Reform Church, Urdd Gobaith Cymru, Wales Federation of Young Farmers' Clubs, Welsh Association of Youth Clubs, Welsh Federation of Boys' and Girls' Groups, Welsh Scout Council, and the Young Men's Christian Association of Wales.

All organisations were informed of their grant levels for 1993-94 on 8 April, except the Welsh Association of Youth Clubs, which was informed on 26 May as its application was handled separately.

Wales Youth Agency

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the training materials produced to date by the Wales Youth Agency aimed at (a) young people and (b) those employed in the youth service since the establishment of the agency;

(2) if he will list the publicity leaflets aimed at young people produced by the Wales Youth Agency since its establishment;

(3) how many consultation exercises have been undertaken to date by the Wales Youth Agency with organisations of young people; and if he will list (a) the subject of each consultation and (b) the organisations which were consulted.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to investigate staffing decisions undertaken by the Wales Youth Agency in relation to former employees of the Welsh Youth Forum.

Sir Wyn Roberts: No. The Department has been kept informed of the agency's staffing decisions relating to former employees of the Wales Youth Forum.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what representations have been received by his Department from the Wales Youth Agency since its establishment concerning (a) the participation of young people in decision making and (b) the future of the youth service agency;

(2) if he will list the written representation received by his Department from the Wales Youth Agency since its establishment on policy issues affecting young people.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Wales Youth Agency has made representations on the future of the Welsh youth card, information needs of young people, young people's membership of the management board: youth service funding, innovatory grants scheme in Wales, and the validation of training for youth workers in Wales.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the meetings held to date between members of his Department and members of the Wales Youth Agency, indicating the date and purpose of each meeting.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Since its establishment in April 1992, the Department has met the chairman, vice-chairman and other members of the Wales Youth Agency's management board on three occasions.

Date	Purpose
8 April 1992	Introductory meeting with chairman and vice-chairman
2 June 1992	Agency's role and activities
25 May 1993	Funding of the youth service

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the members on the management group of the Wales Youth Agency, indicating their names and representative organisations; and which members are aged 25 years or under.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The management board's membership is:

Name	Representative body
Mr. Gerald Davies (Chairman)	Personal capacity
Dr. Howard Williamson	Personal capacity
Ms Sara Edwards	Personal capacity
Ms Michelle Herbert[1]	Personal capacity
Mrs. Beverly Martin	Personal capacity
Mr. Brian Thirsk	Wales Association of Full-time Youth and Community Workers
Mr. Bert Jones	North-East Wales Institute of Higher Education
Mrs. Amber Hughes[1]	Wales Youth Forum
Mr. Peter Williams	Further Education and Youth Service Association of Wales
Mr. Dewi Jones	Welsh Joint Education Committee
Mr. David Allen	Council for Wales of Voluntary Youth Services

[1] Denotes members aged 25 or less.

Youth Service

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to introduce a statutory youth service in Wales and to develop a formula for funding local youth service provision.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None. Local education authorities already have a statutory duty to secure provision for their areas of adequate facilities for further education, and for recreation, social and physical training for those of school age. These provisions cover the youth service.

The resources made available to Welsh local authorities through the annual local authority revenue settlement are not attributed to particular services. Youth service funding at the local level is a matter for individual authorities to determine in the light of local needs and priorities.

European Environmental Agency

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make representations to the European Community advocating Wales as a location for the new European Environmental Agency.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him on this issue on 24 February at column 634.

Aggregates

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures showing the estimated level of primary aggregates production in Wales by county (a) for the 1992-96 period and (b) between 2006-11; and what the 2006-11 production levels will be and the percentage of the 1992-96 levels in each instance.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Government do not provide guidance on primary aggregates production on a county basis. Details of the regional position based on the proposals in the draft revision of minerals planning guidance note 6, published in January, are available in the Library of the House.

Housing

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the Welsh housing authorities making non-statutory rate fund contributions to their housing revenue account in 1992-93, giving the amounts in each case.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Council housing authorities can make contributions to the housing revenue account only in accordance with schedule 4 to the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 as amended by the Leasehold Reform Housing and Urban Development Act 1993.

Homelessness

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many bed-and-breakfast establishments are currently used by each local authority in Wales to house homeless people; and how many establishments have no (a) kitchen and (b) bathroom facilities.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is not available centrally.

Youth Training

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list for each training and enterprise council in Wales their youth training performance in 1992-93 showing (a) the cost per output point and (b) the number of national vocational qualifications per 100 leavers, together with the latest information he has for 1993-94; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list for each training and enterprise council in Wales their employment training performance in 1992-93 showing (a) the cost per output point, (b) the number of national vocational qualifications per 100 leavers and (c) the number of positive outcomes per 100 leavers, together with the latest information he has for 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on the performance of TECs in Wales in these areas is used for management purposes by my officials in their discussions with TECs. My approach to performance measurement is being refined and I will consider publishing comparative information in due course.

Woodlands

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of the total land mass of Wales is made of publicly-owned woodland and forests.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The publicly-owned forests and woodlands managed by the Forestry Commission cover about 6 per cent. of the total land area of Wales. Information on the area of woodland owned by other public bodies is not readily available but it is not thought that it would be significant as a percentage of the total land area.

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are being taken to ensure the Welsh public will continue to have access to publicly-owned woodland; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Forestry Commission encourages people to enjoy the publicly-owned forests in its care through a "freedom to roam" policy. It also provides a range of visitor facilities, and caters for many outdoor activities and sports. The Commission will be continuing to implement these policies in its management of forests in the future.

Arrangements for securing continued public access to Forestry Commission woodlands sold under the disposals programme, by means of prior agreements entered into between the commission and local authorities, were introduced in October 1991. These arrangements will be reviewed this year in consultation with the countryside agencies and the local authority associations.

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many acres of woodland in Wales are open for public access; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Forestry Commission manages 127,000 hectares (about 315,000 acres) of woodland in Wales and encourages public access through a "freedom to roam" policy. Public access is also often permitted in woodlands under the management of local authorities and bodies such as the Woodland Trust, but figures for these and the areas of privately owned woodlands open to the public are not readily available.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are being taken in Wales to help those people graduating from TECs to find employment; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: All TEC training programmes are focused on obtaining employment through improved skills and qualifications. Trainees are provided with job search advice and support and TEC training providers maintain close contact with local employers. In addition the Employment Service provides a range of advisory and guidance services through its network of local offices.

The latest information available for 1992-93 indicates that following their period of training with TECs, 3,466 adult trainees and 5,309 youth trainees in Wales secured employment or progressed into further education or training.

Child Sex Abuse

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what level of funding has been granted by his Department to local authorities in Wales towards the development of specialist therapeutic and support services for sexually abused childen and their families in each of the last three years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Local authority social services expenditure is funded through the annual local authority revenue and capital settlements. It is for individual authorities to decide how to apportion those resources between and within services in accordance with their statutory obligations and their own priorities.

Secondary Schools

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many pupils attended each of the secondary schools in Wales in the school year 1992-93.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The number of pupils on the roll of each secondary school in Wales at January 1993 is as follows:

GP Fund Holders

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for each fund-holding general medical practitioner's practice in Wales the per capita allocations for the purchase of hospital services in 1993-94.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It would be inappropriate to publish per capita allocations for each fund-holding practice in Wales. Allocations reflect the individual nature and extent of these services with which patients in each practice have been provided over previous years. The per capita allocations to fund holders for the purchase of hospital services in 1993-94 on average amount to £71 per patient, and range from £44 to £128.

Low Pay

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average wage of the lowest paid decile of the population in Wales in 1991 (a) at 1991 prices and (b) at 1979 prices.

Mr. Redwood: It is not statistical custom to calculate average earnings within the lowest or highest deciles. The New Earnings Survey estimates that, in 1991, 10 per cent. of full-time adult employees in Wales earned below £128·70 per week. At constant 1979 prices, the figure was £52·50 per week.

Valleys Initiative

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give a breakdown of expenditure at constant prices for each year from 1988-89 to 1992-93 for each sub-programme of the valleys initiative programme.

Mr. Redwood: The information requested is set out in the table.

Welshpool Bypass

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many accidents have occurred on the Welshpool bypass since its opening on 16 July; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I am advised that up to 21 July, four accidents have been recorded by Dyfed/Powys police on the bypass or at its junctions. From an initial examination, it does not appear that the design of the new road has contributed to the incidents. The situation will be kept under close review.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will instruct his highways department to re-design the Sarnybryncaled junctions on the Welshpool bypass; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This junction has been designed in accordance with national standards. As is usual in the period after the opening of a new stretch of trunk road, use of the bypass will be closely monitored and any necessary improvements identified at Sarnybryncaled or elsewhere will be introduced.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures showing the total tonnage of hazardous waste transported through each port in Wales in 1990-91 and 1991-92; and if he will publish a breakdown of the types of waste transported.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested was published in issues of the Environmental Digest for Wales, available in the Library of the House. 1990-91 figures appeared in table 1.49 of volume 6 and 1991-92 figures in table 1.53 of volume 7, subject to the following revisions:

	Waste imported (tonnes)
Holyhead, 1991-92
Chlorinated solvents	21·7
Miscellaneous redundant waste	16·2
Total	385·5
Newport, 1991-92

Temporary Accommodation

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many households in temporary accommodation in Wales were living in (a) bed-and-breakfast accommodation, (b) hostels, including women's refuges, and (c) short-life housing in each year since 1987.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information for the years 1987 to 1991 has been published in Table 7.9 of Welsh Housing Statistics No. 12 1992, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. On 31 December 1992 there were 248 households temporarily accommodated in bed and breakfast, 394 in hostels and women's refuges and 89 in short-life dwellings.

Beaches (Pollution)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what monitoring is conducted by his Department on local authority compliance with its advice concerning the public display of the results of National Rivers Authority testing of water quality of Welsh European Community designated beaches.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: As in previous years, Welsh Office officials wrote to all coastal local authorities at the beginning of the bathing season encouraging them to participate in the bathing water quality poster scheme. It is for each local authority to decide whether it wishes to participate in the scheme.

Children in Care

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many complaints have been received by the Commission for Local Administration in Wales from and on behalf of children and young people in care in each year since 1987.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The hon. Gentleman will need to seek this information by writing to the commissioner for local administration in Wales.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the average amount of leaving care grant given by each local authority to children and young people formerly in care in Wales in each year since 1989.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not available centrally.

Heavy Metal Pollution

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures showing (a) the tonnage totals permitted to be deposited in each river estuary in Wales and (b) the actual tonnage deposited for (i) zinc, (ii) cadmium, (iii) lead, (iv) copper, (v) mercury and (vi) chromium in (1) 1991 (2) 1992.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The following levels of dredged material were licensed for disposal at sites in Welsh estuaries in 1991. 1992 figures are not yet available.

	Thousand Tonnes
Cardiff Grounds	3,178
Newport	3,500
Uskmouth	120

Source: Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

There are no specific amounts licensed for individual contaminants but prior to licensing the concentrations of each contaminant in the dredged material are measured to ensure that those amounts are acceptable for disposal at sea.

The amounts of the contaminants deposited at each of these sites in 1991 was published in table 2.24 of the Environmental Digest for Wales, No. 7, available in the Library of the House. Figures for 1992 are not yet available.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the tonnage of (a) cadmium, (b) zinc, (c) lead, (d) copper, (e) mercury and (f) chromium disposed of off the coasts of Wales in (i) 1991 and (ii) 1992.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested for 1991 was published in table 2.23 of the Environmental Digest for Wales, No. 7, available in the Library of the House. Figures for 1992 are not yet available.

Children Act 1989

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what monitoring has been undertaken by his Department on the provision of accommodation for 16 and 17-year-old people designated as in need by local authorities in Wales as a result of the Children Act 1989.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Local authorities were asked through the Welsh Office circular 26/91 to report on inter-agency collaboration under the Children Act 1989 on a wide range of issues, including provision of accommodation for children in need. Most authorities have now reported and the remainder of the responses are expected shortly.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many complaints have been received to date by each social services department from children under section 26 of the Children Act 1989.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Paragraph 3.53 of the Children Act Report 1992 recorded the latest available information. Eleven complaints in total had been received from or on behalf of children by local authorities in Wales in the first nine months following the implementation of the Children Act on 14 October 1991. Details are:

	Number
Clwyd	Nil
Dyfed	1
Gwent	2
Gwynedd	4
Mid Glamorgan	2
Powys	Nil
South Glamorgan	1
West Glamorgan	1

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which local authorities in Wales have not developed policy statements or related practice guidelines and procedures regarding children leaving care.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I am not aware of a local authority in Wales which has not developed any policy statements or related practice guidelines and procedures on children leaving care.

Urban Waste Water Directive

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made by his Department in drawing up plans for the Urban Waste Water Treatment Directive in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Urban Waste Water Treatment Directive requires member states to establish an implementation programme by the end of this year. Relevant Government Departments, including the Welsh Office, are working with the National Rivers Authority and the water industry in drawing up this programme.

Independent Schools

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the independent schools in Wales which currently have fewer than 50 pupils; and which of those schools have registered as children's homes under the Children Act 1989.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Under the Children Act 1989, independent schools which provide accommodation for 50 or fewer children are required to be registered as children's homes unless they are approved to take children with statements of special educational needs under Section 11(3)(a) of the Education Act 1981. A list of such schools in Wales is set out as follows:

Independent schools providing accommodation for 50 or fewer pupils and which are not approved under section 11(3)(a) of the Education Act 1981

The Cathedral School, Cardiff
Howells School, Cardiff
Emmanuel School, Swansea
Netherwood School, Saundersfoot, Dyfed
St. Clare's Convent School, Porthcawl
St. John's School, Porthcawl
St. David's Ursuline Convent School, Brecon
(to re-open as St. Davids School from 1 September 1993)

Their registration as children's homes is a matter for local authority social services departments.

Oil Pollution

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the reported incidents of oil pollution around the coast of Wales in (a) 1991 and (b) 1992; and which incidents resulted in a spillage extending for one mile or more.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Summary information on incidents around the Welsh coast in 1991 was published in table 2.30 of the Environmental Digest for Wales, No. 7, available in the Library of the House. Figures for 1992 are not yet available.

School Pupils

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a list showing the number of permanent pupils excluded from (a) primary and (b) secondary schools according to each local education authority in Wales in each of the last three years; and how many pupils issued with statements have been included in each area.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Cardigan Bay (Nature Reserve)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to designate Cardigan bay as a marine nature reserve; and if he will establish the posts of marine conservation wardens for the area.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend is responsible for designating marine nature reserves in Wales following an application from the Countryside Council for Wales. There are no such applications currently before the Department.

Responsibility for the management of such reserves rests with the Countryside Council for Wales.

Miss Widdecombe: As the information is contained in a considerable number of tables, I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy in the Library.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will list for each training and enterprise council in England their youth training performance in 1992-93 showing (a) the cost per output point and (b) the number of national vocational qualifications per 100 leavers, together with the latest information he has for 1993-94; and if he will make a statement;

Miss Widdecombe: We intend to publish inter-TEC comparisons for 1992-93 as soon as the final figures have been agreed. A copy will be placed in the Library. We intend to publish full year comparisons for 1993-94 next summer. We do not plan to publish in-year tables because uneven flows of information during the year can distort comparisons of performance.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what sums of money have been contributed from the European social fund towards (a) youth training and (b) employment training in 1992; what percentage contribution to the total costs of youth training and employment training this represents; what other Department of Employment training and employment programmes have been financially supported by the ESF; how much financial support has been given in 1992; what proportion of the total cost this contribution represented; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested about programmes which have received European social fund support in 1992 is provided in the table. This data relate to ESF support for programmes in England and Wales:

	ESF support[1] (£ million)	ESF support as a percentage of expenditure
Employment training	140·25	16·88
Youth training	14·54	2·53

[1] Applications totals.

TEC Challenge

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what criteria he used in selecting the winners of TEC challenge; and if he will place copies of the successful bids in the Library.

Miss Widdecombe: The advisory panel chaired by the permanent secretary of the Employment Department appraised the bids on eight criteria, based upon those set out in the training and enterprise council challenge prospectus published in April, a copy of which is in the Library. I made my decisions after receiving advice from the advisory panel. The TEC challenge bids are commercial-in-confidence; however, I have placed a list showing brief descriptions of the winning bids in the Library.

Job Clubs

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in each region and Great Britain as a whole since April 1992 have joined job clubs, how many have left, how many leavers got jobs and how many entered another positive outcome; and if he will break down the information by the ethnic origin and sex of participants.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many job clubs were operational for each region and for Great Britain as a whole at the latest available date; and how many of them in each region catered for groups with special needs.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the employment service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Ms Clare Short, dated 26 July 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to him about performance information about the Jobclub programme. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Table "A" attached shows for each region and for Great Britain the numbers who have joined Jobclubs between 30 March 1992 and 25 June 1993 together with information during the same period of those members leaving. Leavers who are shown as going into other positive outcomes have gone on to either training, full-time education or self-employment.

As I indicated in my letter to you of 28 October 1992, information on the ethnic background and male/female characteristics of Jobclub leavers is now collected on annual sample survey basis. The information was collected for the month of March 1993, and the results of the count are in tables "B". Tables "B" show the performance between 1 March 1993 and 26 March 1993 for male and female Jobclub members and by ethnic origin on a regional basis and for Great Britain as a whole.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also placea a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Job Interview Guarantee Scheme

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many unemployed people have taken part in the job interview guarantee scheme in each region in 1992-93 and in the first quarter of 1993-94; and how many participants have secured full-time or part-time employment with their sponsoring employer.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Ms Clare Short, dated 26 July 1993:

The information is set out by region in the attached table.

I hope this is helpful.

Child Care

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action has been taken by his Department to implement the 1992 European Community recommendation on child care.

Miss Widdecombe: The Government welcome the recommendation, which is in tune with our policy of encouraging measures which allow parents to balance their work and family responsibilities. Since the recommendation was adopted in March 1992, we have introduced a major £45 million initiative to provide 50,000 extra out-of-school child care places for the over-fives. Shortly before the recommendation was adopted, we published the booklet, "The Best of Both Worlds" which illustrates with case studies a variety of flexible employment practices which can benefit working parents and employers alike. My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, in his previous post as the Secretary of State for Wales, launched the Chwarae Teg or "Fair Play" initiative which brings together a partnership of the public, private and voluntary sectors to promote new child care provision and flexible working as part of a strategy to increase opportunities for women in the work force. We will continue to look for opportunities to promote a more family-friendly working environment.

Actively-seeking-work Test

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many claimants in each quarter since April 1992 for each region and for Great Britain as a whole have (a) been issued with warning letters for not actively seeking work, (b) had their claim referred to an adjudication officer for not actively seeking work, (c) had their claims allowed or disallowed for not actively seeking work, (d) had their claim referred to an adjudication officer for refusing suitable employment and (e) how many of those in (d) have had their benefit disqualified or not disqualified.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Ms Clare Short, dated 26 July 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to him about the number of claimants who have been issued with warning letters for not actively seeking work; had their claim referred to an adjudication officer for not actively seeking work; had their claims allowed or disallowed for not actively seeking work; had their claim referred to an adjudication officer for refusing suitable employment; and how many of those have had their benefit disqualified or not disqualified in each quarter since April 1992 for each region and for Great Britain as a whole. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The publication "Analysis of Adjudication Officers' Decisions", includes the statistics you asked for on actively seeking work and refusal of employment, for each quarter since April 1992 to March 1993, for each standard region and for Great Britain as a whole, and copies are held in the Library of the House.

A change introduced in the Social Security Act 1989 removed the requirement that employment offered had to be suitable for the person concerned; instead the client now has to show that they have good cause for refusing any job which is offered to them.

I enclose a table showing by Region, and Nationally, the number of warning letters issued to clients whose worksearch activity was not considered to be adequate.

I hope this is helpful. As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Work Trials

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many work trial agreements have been made with employers in 1992-93 and in the first quarter of 1993-94, for each region and for Great Britain as a whole; how many unemployed people have taken part in work trials in each region; how many participants have secured full-time or part-time employment with their sponsoring employer; what is the best information he has on the wages they receive; how long those jobs have lasted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Ms Clare Short, dated 26 July 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to him about Work Trials. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Figures showing the numbers of unemployed people participating in Work Trials, and the numbers placed into work as a result are attached. Details of the number of Work Trial agreements made with employers, the wages of Work Trial participants and the length of these jobs is not collected.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

I hope this is helpful.

Restart

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in each region and Great Britain as a whole how many people attended a Restart interview in 1992-93 and in the first quarter of 1993-94; and what were the results of those interviews broken down in the same way as the reply given on 18 December 1990, Official Report, column 148.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Ms Clare Short, dated 26 July 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Questions to him about how many people, for each region and for Great Britain as a whole, attended a Restart interview in 1992-93 and in the first quarter of 1993-94; and what were the results of those interviews broken down in the same way as the reply given in the Official Report, column 148, on 18 December 1990. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The Restart interview programme provides a framework within which the Employment Service provides help for long-term unemployed people. It provides a gateway to the range of employment and training opportunities available as well as being a means of ensuring that claimants remain available for and are actively seeking work.

During the 1992-93 operational year 2·8 million interviews were conducted and from these interviews 33,300 started work, 78,200 began training under Employment Training, 106,000 started in Jobclub, 112,100 started a Restart course and 6,900 started the Enterprise Allowance Scheme.

The Employment Service has changed its performance monitoring at a national level for 1993-94 and the information for this year cannot be given in exactly the same format as that previously provided. Information is not yet available for the first quarter of this operational year, the figures quoted are for the first two months. During the first two months of 1993-94 54,500 interviews were conducted and from these interviews 5,800 people started work and 95,600 started an Employment Department programme, such as Jobclub, Restart Course, Jobplan Workshop and Training For Work.

These figures reflect only the direct results of Restart. We do not know how many people subsequently take up a job or a place on an employment or training programme as a result of the guidance given to them at their interview.

An indication of the scale of that effect is provided by the report "The Restart Effect" which was recently published by the independent Policy Studies Institute. It is based on an analysis of the largest survey of unemployed people in the United Kingdom since 1980. This showed conclusively that the programme had a major effect in reducing the time it takes people to leave unemployment, to get a job and to enter Employment Training, particularly for those people who were at a disadvantage within the labour market.

I hope that this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many training and enterprise council chairmen have left each TEC board since its launch; and how many TEC directors have resigned since the launch of their TEC.

Miss Widdecombe: A total of 34 training and enterprise council chairmen have left TEC boards since their launch.

Two Chairmen have left the following TECs:
SOLOTEC;
South Thames.

One Chairman has left the following TECs:
AZTEC;
Bedfordshire;
Calderdale/Kirklees;
CAMBSTEC (Central & South Cambridgeshire);
Coventry & Warwickshire;
Devon & Cornwall;
Dorset;
Greater Nottingham;
Gwent;
Hampshire;
HAWTEC (Hereford & Worcester);
Humberside;
Leeds;
London East;
Manchester;

METROTEC (Wigan);
North Derbyshire;
Northumberland;
North London;
North Nottinghamshire;
QUALITEC (St. Helens) Ltd.;
Rochdale;
Rotherham;
Sheffield;
Shropshire;
Southern Derbyshire;
South Glamorgan;
Stockport/High Peak;
Surrey;
TARGED North West Wales;
Teesside;
Wearside;
West Wales;
Wight Enterprise;
Wolverhampton.

A total of 328 TEC directors have left TEC boards since the launch of their TEC. This is principally due to changes in their business commitments, and reflects similar levels of turnover in the private sector as a whole.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest available information on the number of male and female directors of training and enterprise councils; how many are from (a) ethnic minority backgrounds and (b) the private sector; what is the best information he has about which industrial sectors they come from; and how many of the non-private sector directors are from (i) local authorities, (ii) local education authorities, (iii) other educational organisations, (iv) trade unions, (v) voluntary organisations, (iv) ethnic minority organisations, (vii) employers' associations and (viii) others.

Miss Widdecombe: There are currently 942 male and 127 female directors of training and enterprise councils in England. Of these, 757 come from the private sector.

Of the non-private sector directors:

(i) 98 are from local directors;
(ii) 43 from local education authorities;
(iii) 31 from other education organisations;
(iv) 52 from trade unions;
(v) 37 from voluntary organisations;
(vi) 2 from ethnic minority organisations;
(vii) 12 from employers' associations;
(viii) 37 others.

Information on the ethnic origin of TEC board members is provided voluntarily. The most up-to-date figures are from 1992 and cover only 44 TECs. Twenty board members are quoted as being of ethnic minority origin.

The Department does not maintain statistics on the industrial sector origins of private sector TEC directors.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will direct training and enterprise councils to publish annual statements of accounts for public inspection; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Training and enterprise councils are required to publish an annual report and audited statement of accounts within four months after the relevant financial year.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what arrangements apply to the payment of salaries and other expenses of officers of local authorities who serve on boards of training and enterprise councils; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Directors serving on boards of training and enterprise councils are refunded expenses reasonably incurred in connection with their duties on behalf of TECs. They are not renummerated.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will arrange for training and enterprise councils to provide information on individual local projects, including costs, on request by a member of the public or a district council; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Training and enterprise councils are required to publish a summary of their corporate and business plans and annual reports. This is available to the public on request. TECs' corporate plans must also be made available for inspection by the public.

TECs are private companies. It is for them to determine what information they publish about the funding of specific projects.

Parental and Family Leave

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his policy to support European Community directives on parental and family leave for employees.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No.

Methyl Bromide

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make representations to the European Community advocating the adoption of measures to protect workers from exposure to methyl bromide.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A proposal for an EC directive on the protection of workers from chemical agents, such as methyl bromide, has recently been published. A comprehensive set of legislation already exists in the United Kingdom to protect workers from hazardous substances, including methyl bromide. The United Kingdom will press for the principles of this legislation to be incorporated in any corresponding Community measure.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what guidance is issued by his Department regarding protection of workers handling methyl bromide.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In 1991, the Health and Safety Executive published guidance note CS 12: "Fumigation using methyl bromide (bromomethane)".

Additional guidance is available in the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988—COSHH—and the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986. This includes an approved code of practice which gives practical guidance on the requirements of COSHH in relation to fumigation operations.

St. Helena (Work Permits)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many work permits have been issued to citizens of St. Helena for each of the last 15 years; and what proposals he has for numbers in future years.

Miss Widdecombe: The number of work permits issued to citizens of St. Helena for each of the years for which figures are available is as follows:

	Number
1986	20
1987	30
1988	28
1989	51
1990	53
1991	30
1992	34

There is no specific number of work permits planned to be issued to St. Helenians in future years. However, the maximum number of permits available to St. Helenians under the special dependent territories quota scheme is 35 in 1993 and 30 in 1994, when the scheme ends.

Applications for work permits for St. Helenians outside these arrangements will continue to be considered against the normal work permit scheme criteria.

ES Guide 39

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when ES guide 39 was issued; what it replaced; whether the letters in appendix V4 and appendix V3 were in the previous guide; and whether the note of guidance in clauses V16 and V17 was in the previous guide.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. John Spellar, dated 26 July 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to him about ES Guide 39. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief executive of the Agency.

ES Guide 39 was issued in January 1993 and replaced the New Client Adviser Guide and the Claimant Adviser Handbook. The guidance contained in Section V paragraphs V16 and V17, and the letters in Appendices V3 and V4, have been taken directly from the Claimant Adviser Handbook. I enclose copies of the guidance previously contained in the Claimant Adviser Handbook and that in ES Guide 39 for your information.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Current claim—no medical evidence

116 If the claimant has an established claim to benefit and states during the interview that they:

a have recently been disallowed sickness or invalidity benefit, and b wish to appeal against the DSS AO's disallowance, and c their doctor is not issuing sickness certificates, and d their medical condition has significantly deteriorated since they last visited their doctor; or e are not capable of undertaking work; and f have not seen their doctor;

the claimant should be asked to seek their doctor's advice about their capacity to work. The following action should then be taken.

117 If the claimant agrees to see their doctor the claimant adviser should complete and give them a copy of the letter in Appendix I3. A copy of this letter should be sent with a letter to the doctor (Appendix I4) to explain the reason for the claimant's visit. This procedure should prevent confusion between the claimant, the doctor and the claimant adviser about why the claimant is seeking their doctor's advice about their capacity for work. It must be made clear to the claimant that they are seeking their doctor's advice on their own behalf and not on behalf of the claimant adviser or the Employment Service.

Right to Strike

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what legislative and other action the Government intend to take to lessen the right to strike for public sector workers.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government have no immediate plans for legislation beyond the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Act, which received Royal Assent on 1 July. We continue to keep all aspects of industrial relations law under review.

Low Pay

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the change in income of the lowest paid 10 per cent. of those in full-time employment in England in real terms from May 1979 to April 1992.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The required information on earnings is published in table 116 of part E of the new earnings survey for 1979 and 1992. The April 1992 and April 1979 retail prices index required to adjust these for inflation can be found in table 6.4 of the Employment Gazette for July 1993 and in table 26 of the annual supplement to "Economic Trends 1979". Copies of these are in the Library.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the wage level at the latest date for which figures are available for the lowest paid 10 per cent. in full-time employment in (a) England as a whole and (b) in each region in England.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is published in table X5.3 of part A of the 1992 new earnings survey, a copy of which is in the Library.

Hazardous Substances

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what changes he plans to make to the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations following the Government's deregulation review.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: As part of the Government's deregulation initiative, I have invited the Health and Safety Commission to review the costs and benefits of health and safety legislation. The review will include the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations. The commission has established seven industrial task groups to assist in this work, and plans to report on its review in April 1994. It is therefore far too early to know what the HSC will propose.

London East TEC

Mr. Ron Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the work of London East TEC in the London borough of Newham.

Miss Widdecombe: London East Training and Enterprise Council—LETEC—in common with all training and enterprise councils, is providing a wide range of services and initiatives in education, enterprise and training which it considers to be appropriate for the needs of its local area. The London borough of Newham benefits from many of LETEC's area wide programmes, as well as specific local programmes. It also has the advantage of Stratford city challenge resources contributing to the development of its most deprived area.

Careers Service

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give estimates for (a) expenditure already incurred and (b) expenditure envisaged in implementing those provisions of the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Act 1993 relating to the careers service.

Miss Widdecombe: In preparing for the new careers service arrangements, a small amount of administrative and other costs have so far been incurred by the Employment Department. It is estimated that in a full year, additional running costs will be about £0·5 million in England. The provision of careers services in Scotland and Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales. The Government's expenditure plans for 1994-95 and beyond will be settled later this year in the current public expenditure survey. Sufficient funds will be provided to fulfil the statutory duty of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

Incomes

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide a table showing the number and percentage of the adult population in each region with less than the average annual national income level in each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The available information, the proportions of full-time employees in the new earnings survey sample with average gross weekly earnings below the level of average earnings, is provided in the table:

Holiday Pay and Unpaid Wages

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 7 June, Official Report, column 99, what has been the cost of (a) holiday pay and (b) unpaid wages owed to employees whose employer becomes insolvent or is otherwise unable to pay in each year since 1987-88.

Miss Widdecombe: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State may make payment from the national insurance fund for holiday pay and unpaid wages to employees whose employer becomes insolvent. The cost of such payments for each year since 1987-88 is as follows:

	Holiday pay £ million	Unpaid wages £ million
1987-88	12·8	11·2

Jobcentres

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide a table showing the number of vacancies in jobcentres that were (a) temporary and (b) permanent in each quarter from April 1987 in each region.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Alan Milburn, dated 26 July 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to him asking about the number of vacancies notified to Jobcentres since April 1987. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Providing historical vacancy information from 1987 will take some time to collate. I will write to you shortly with the complete information you requested.

In the meantime, I enclose a table showing the information you requested for the past three quarters.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Fraud

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are his Department's current estimates for unemployment benefit fraud, and how the figures are arrived at.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. John Battle, dated 26 July 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to him about the current estimates for unemployment benefit fraud; and how the figures are arrived at. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

We do not know how many people claiming unemployment benefits are doing so fraudulently and we do not make approximations. However, you may be interested to know that in the last financial year my fraud inspectors saved the taxpayer £44·71 million net as a result of over 61,000 people withdrawing their claims to benefit following investigation.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Paliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many officers have been employed investigating unemployment benefit fraud (a) in local offices and (b) in regional teams for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. John Battle, dated 26 July 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to him about how many officers have been employed investigating unemployment benefit fraud, in local offices and regional teams, for each year since 1979. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The ES fraud investigation organisation was restructured in 1984 and, unfortunately, comparative figures for earlier years are not available.

The number of ES Inspectors employed are as follows:

Year	Number
1984-85	450
1985-86	650
1986-87	720
1987-88	785
1988-89	820
1989-90	820
1990-91	820
1991-92	780
1992-93	780

ES inspectors are of Executive Officer grade and are supported by clerical and managerial staff.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Child Care

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what intentions his Department has to introduce measures on child care and employment rights to reflect the change in the number of women in the work force.

Miss Widdecombe: The Government have made clear their intention to enable women to fulfil their full potential in the world of work. In April 1993 we introduced the out-of-school child care grant, an initiative delivered by training and enterprise councils, and local enterprise companies in Scotland. A total of £45 million has been allocated and we hope to create 50,000 new child care places for the over-fives. The Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Act 1993 gives working women significant new maternity rights including a new right to 14 weeks maternity leave and comprehensive protection against dismissal on grounds of pregnancy, regardless of length of service or hours of work. The Act also includes a right to complain to an industrial tribunal against discriminatory terms in collective agreements, and a power for industrial tribunals to impose restrictions on reporting the identities of the parties in cases involving allegations of sexual harassment.

Complaints (Young People)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many complaints have been received in each year since 1987 by the Equal Opportunities Commission from and on behalf of children and young people aged 18 years or under; and what proportion related to schooling matters in each year.

Miss Widdecombe: The Equal Opportunities Commission does not collect this information in the form requested. However, the EOC's annual reports contain information on overall numbers of inquiries relating to education and training.

Travel-to-work Expenses

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he has taken to repeal the salary ceiling for eligibility to travel-to-work expense claims.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 21 July 1993]: The travel to interview scheme is currently under review and the eligibility conditions are being looked at to see whether the resources available can be better targeted. The possibility of removing the salary limit is included in the review. Any changes to the rules are subject to Treasury approval. Subject to that approval, our intention is to implement any changes as quickly as possible.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the effect of the level of assistance available under the special employment schemes on the level of employment of blind people.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 23 July 1993]: Such an assessment is contained in the consultative document "Evaluation of Special Schemes for people with disabilities: Summary Paper", November 1990. A copy of this is available in the Library.

The range of help currently available to the blind and partially sighted will continue, and be enhanced, under access to work from April 1994.

ENVIRONMENT

Bed-and-Breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to establish minimum room size standards for bed-and-breakfast accommodation used to house homeless people.

Sir George Young: The homelessness code of guidance for local authorities—Third edition—advises that bed-and-breakfast accommodation should be used only as a last resort, and that care should be taken in ensuring that all forms of temporary accommodation meet acceptable standards. The number of homeless households placed in bed-and-breakfast accommodation has reduced significantly over the last 12 months, and now accounts for only a small proportion of those placed in temporary accommodation.

Council Tax

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what analysis he has made of the impact of the introduction of the council tax on pensioners in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 21 July 1993, Official Report, column 264.

Waste Recycling

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with his European counterparts on the subject of waste recycling.

Mr. Yeo: My colleagues and I have regular discussions with our European counterparts. The subject of recycling has arisen frequently in recent discussions, with a particular focus on the proposed EC packaging directive, and the effects of the German packaging ordinance on recycling in other member states.

These issues were debated at the most recent Environment Council meeting on 29 June. All other member states shared the United Kingdom's concern about the impact of the German ordinance.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps the Government have taken towards improving the proportion of household waste recycled.

Mr. Yeo: The Government are taking a number of measures to encourage recycling. These are set out in "This Common Inheritance, The Second Year Report" (Cm 2068). In particular:

we have allocated £15 million in supplementary credit approvals to local authorities to encourage provision of facilities for recycling in 1993-94;

we have announced our intention to increase recycling credits from 1 April 1994, so that they reflect the full economic costs of disposal;

we are holding discussions with a range of industries, with a view to establishing how they might contribute to the achievement of the 25 per cent. target.

Minerals Planning Guidance

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to amend minerals planning guidance note No. 6 to include (a) references for the need for the adoption of demand management policies in regional planning guidance, structure and local plans and (b) references to the need to encourage consideration of aggregates use in the environmental apraisal of plan options.

Mr. Baldry: These matters are being considered in the light of the responses to the draft guidelines issued for public consultation in January. The revised guidelines will be published later this year.

County Hall, London

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest position with regard to the sale of county hall.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will a statement on the future of county hall, London.

Mr. Baldry: I would refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Planning to the hon. Member for Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes), on 20 July 1993, Official Report, column 105.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the estimated total cost of county hall, London, since (a) the abolition of the Greater London council and (b) the abolition of the Inner London education authority, in terms of (i) maintenance and repairs, (ii) security, (iii) heat, light and other costs and (iv) loss of rental income from unlet vacant offices.

Mr. Gummer: The total cost of maintaining the county hall complex since the abolition of the GLC and ILEA during the period whilst it was still substantially occupied is not known. Since it was fully vacated in 1990, the annual cost of maintenance and repairs has been in the region of £980,000, of security £510,000 and of heat, light and similar costs £152,000. It would not be appropriate to seek to estimate the loss of rental income since the London residuary body has never sought to let vacant parts of the complex as this would inhibit its disposal for refurbishment or development.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the unconditional sale of the riverside building county hall, London, was completed; to whom; and what was the total consideration.

Mr. Gummer: An unconditional contract exists for the sale of the riverside building of county hall to the Shirayama Corporation of Japan and is due to be completed in October. The amount of the consideration is a matter of commercial confidentiality.

Aggregates

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are currently being undertaken by his Department to secure a reduction in the demand for aggregates in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Baldry: Draft guidelines and a policy issues paper on aggregate extraction were issued in January. The responses received are now being reviewed. The future level of demand for aggregates is central to that review.

Minerals Act 1981

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress of his review of the Minerals Act 1981.

Mr. Baldry: We consulted last year on options for change. I hope to be able to issue a further consultation paper on detailed proposals later this year.

Radiation Exposure

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the relative effectiveness in minimising exposure to radiation according to the as low as reasonably achievable principle of (a) dry storage of spent advanced gas-cooled reactor fuel followed by direct disposal of (b) reprocessing spent fuel followed by deep disposal of high-level and intermediate-level waste.

Mr. Yeo: One of the objectives of the Government's policy for radioactive waste management is that the exposure to ionising radiation shall be reduced to levels which are as low as reasonably achievable (ALARA), social and economic factors being taken into account. It is for the owners of the spent fuel or their agents to put forward their proposals for dealing with it, and to demonstrate to Government regulatory agencies that the ALARA principle is being met.

Architects

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward proposals to ensure that unqualified persons in other EC countries who cannot use the title architect in those countries are precluded from using the title within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Baldry: No, but people from EC member states who do not have qualifications satisfying the architects directive will not be recognised by the United Kingdom competent authority as professionally qualified.

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all those services or functions contracted out in his Department, since November 1991, in which the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were not applied.

Mr. Baldry: Whether or not the 1981 regulations apply in any particular case will depend on the nature of the work awarded and the contractors' own proposals for carrying it out.

Since publication of the White Paper "Competing for Quality, Buying Better Public Services" the Secretary of State's market-testing programme has included the activities listed below which have been contracted out under contractual arrangements which did not need to incorporate the 1981 regulations:

—procurement of professional property services, provided previously by the Property Services Agency;
—increased use of contract inspectors by the Planning Inspectorate agency;
—information technology project management within the Planning Inspectorate agency; and —research and research services—first tranche.

Information relating to services or functions which are not on the Department's market-testing programme but which have been contracted out since November 1991 cannot be obtained except at disproportionate cost.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all those services or functions contracted out in Ordnance Survey since November 1991, in which the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were not applied.

Mr. Baldry: Since November 1991 Ordnance Survey has not contracted out any function involving the transfer of its staff.

Private Rented Housing

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he is taking to revive the private rented sector; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: We are keen to revive the private rented sector. The deregulation measures in the Housing Act 1988, which introduced assured and assured shorthold tenancies at market rents for most new lettings, was designed to encourage landlords to bring their property onto the market.

We have also launched a number of specific initiatives including the "Rent-a-Room" scheme, under which householders no longer have to pay tax on rent from a lodger in their home if the gross annual amount of the rent is no more than £3,250; the flats over shops scheme, under which £25 million is being made available through local authorities over three years to bring flats over shops back into residential use; and the housing associations as managing agents scheme, which allows housing associations to act as an intermediary between potential private landlords and tenants in order to encourage more empty property to be let.

I am exploring other measures to build on what has been achieved so far.

Council Housing

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses are empty (a) in total and (b) in the north-west region; and how many of them (i) are fit for occupancy, (ii) need minor repairs and (iii) need more extensive renovation.

Sir George Young: Local authorities report the numbers of their own dwellings that are empty in their housing investment programme (HIP1) returns.

The latest available figures for England and the north-west, which are at 1 April 1992, appear in columns A198, total vacant; A191, available for letting; A192, awaiting minor repairs; and A193 and A194, awaiting major works, of the "1992 HIP1—Regional Grossing", a copy of which is in the Library.

Local Government Commission

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will issue revised guidelines for the Local Government Commission.

Mr. Baldry: We have no immediate plans to do so, but we are keeping the guidance under review.

Mr. Olner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the extent to which the Local Government Commission has correctly interpreted the guidance given to it with regard to (a) cost effectiveness, (b) community identity and (c) the case for unitary authorities.

Mr. Baldry: These are matters which we shall be looking at as we receive the Local Government Commission's final recommendations for each review area.

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the interpretation by the Local Government Commission of the guidance given to it by his Department with regard to size and joint arrangements affecting any new arrangements for local government.

Mr. Baldry: These are matters which we shall be looking at as we receive the Local Government Commission's final recommendations for each review area.

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the local authority associations on revision of the Local Government Commission's policy guidance.

Mr. Baldry: The Association of County Councils and the Association of District Councils have given us their views and we are considering them.

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the recommendations of the Local Government Commission so far published.

Mr. Baldry: The Local Government Commission has made final recommendations on the Isle of Wight only, and we are currently considering the Government's response.

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assent he has made of the way in which the Local Government Commission has implemented the policy guidance issued by his Department.

Mr. Baldry: This is a matter which we shall be looking at as we receive the Local Government Commission's final recommendations for each review area.

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what weight he expects the Local Government Commission to give to responses received from local people during stage 3 of the review in each first phase area.

Mr. Baldry: Section 15 of the Local Government Act 1992 places a duty on the Local Government Commission to take into consideration all relevant representations made to it.

Data Processing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the numbers of staff by grade that are employed in Ordnance Survey in the automatic data processing functional specialism.

Mr. Baldry: Ordnance Survey employs 141 staff—one unified grade 6, five unified grade 7, 16 SEO, 46 HEO, 62 EO, nine AO and two AA— in its information and computer services functions.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the numbers of staff by grade that are employed in his Department in the automatic data processing functional specialism.

Mr. Gummer: My department—excluding Ordnance Survey—currently employs 186 staff—detailed by grade below—in the automatic data processing functional specialism:

	Number
SEO	35
HEO	71
EO	47
AO	14
AA	19

UV-B Monitoring

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether current monitoring has established a relationship between stratospheric ozone depletion and UV-B measurements at ground level; and what research is being undertaken to validate scientific models linking ozone depletion and ground level UV-B;

(2) what facilities exist in the United Kingdom for monitoring of UV-B radiation at ground level; to what extent results are affected by low-level ozone pollution in the areas surrounding the monitoring sites; and how successfully these results can be used to predict UV-B levels in other less polluted areas;

(3) what plans he has (a) in the short term and (b) in future years should UV-B levels rise further as a result of ozone depletion, to make UV-B monitoring data available to the public on a daily basis;

(4) what plans he has to upgrade or extend the network of UV-B monitoring stations in the United Kingdom; and if he will outline the work to be done and the timetable.

Mr. Yeo: The National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB), on behalf of the Department of Health, has operated since 1988 three monitoring sites for surface ultra-violet radiation at Chilton, Oxfordshire, Leeds, and Glasgow. The board plans to add three further sites by the end of the year at Camborne, Cornwall, Kinloss, and Lerwick. My Department supports research at Reading university which is playing a leading role in international programmes for determining standards for improved UV-B monitoring networks. I have asked the Department's stratospheric ozone review group (SORG) to assess possibilities for an improved network in its next report this autumn.

Air pollution, including low-level ozone, will have some influence on UV-B radiation reaching the ground, although much less than natural conditions such as cloudiness. The exisiting NRPB sites cover a range of situations from rural to outer urban and are believed to give a good indication of the maximum UV-B levels experienced throughout the United Kingdom. The additional sites planned for the end of this year will provide a further check on this.

Results from the NRPB network are published annually. I understand a scheme to release weekly bulletins is imminent. The Department's stratospheric ozone review group will review ground level UV-B irradiation in its report this autumn. So far, no increase in UV-B has been detected in the United Kingdom against the background of natural variability. The frequency of reporting will be reviewed should this position change.

Monitoring UV-B cannot of itself establish the link between ozone layer depletion and UV-B at ground level, but is essential to validating mathematical models. Current models agree well with monitoring data under the "worst-case" clear sky conditions. They are limited by the availability of precise data on pollution levels, aerosols and clouds, which act to further reduce ground level UV-B.

Homelessness

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement of policy on the homeless outside London, including the young homeless and the discharged mentally ill.

Sir George Young: The aim of reducing homelessness underlies all the Government's housing policies. We have taken steps to increase the supply of low cost housing where it is needed. The public resources available to housing associations, the main providers of new social housing, increased from £935 million in 1989-90 to £1·8 billion in 1993-94, making some 54,500 new homes available this year. The housing market package announced in the autumn statement last year has been a considerable success, providing an extra 18,000 housing association homes in 1992-93, as well as releasing local authority and housing association houses for reletting by enabling their present tenants to become home owners. In addition, the temporary relaxation of the rules governing local authority receipts, for the period November 1992 to December 1993, gives local authorities greatly increased spending power.

Under section 8 of the Housing Act 1985, local authorities have a duty to assess the housing needs of their area and, in their role as enablers, can use their housing and planning powers to stimulate activity by housing associations and the private sector to meet those needs. In the latest guidance to local authorities on the housing investment programme (HIP) round, greater emphasis is also being placed on the development of a strategic housing role by authorities, to encompass all the housing needs and resources of the area. It is for individual local authorities to decide whether schemes to help young homeless people are appropriate to the needs of their area and, in the light of their resources and commitments, the priority to attach to such schemes.

My Department also gives grants under section 73 of the Housing Act 1985 to voluntary sector organisations which help single homeless people. This financial year we have made available £6·45 million to 170 projects—130 outside London—that provide direct, practical help to single homeless people. Seventy nine of these projects help young people secure accommodation, and provide advice, training and continuing support.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State of Health is, through the single homeless young people initiative, funding 14 projects specifically designed to help young people outside London who are homeless, or in danger of becoming so.

Health authorities have an obligation to ensure that appropriate arrangements are made for any necessary continuing care, including drawing up an individual care programme, before mentally ill people are discharged. The evidence we have is that homeless mentally ill people sleeping rough are not those who have been recently discharged from long-stay psychiatric hospitals.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to ensure that the area grant adjustment methodology within standard spending assessments reflects accurately the actual level of wage costs to all local authorities.

Mr. Baldry: The general aim of SSAs is not to reflect actual expenditure but to measure each authority's relative need to spend in order to provide a standard level of service. As far as the area cost adjustment is concerned, we are examining the methodology as part of our review of SSAs for 1994-95. We will be announcing our proposals later in the year.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the outcome of his review of standard spending assessments will be published; in what form; and how long a period there will be for consultation before final decisions by Ministers are made.

Mr. Gummer: I shall discuss the report on the review of standard spending assessments, to be prepared by the SSA sub-group to the settlement working group, with representatives of the local authority associations at the October meeting of the Consultative Council on Local Government Finance.

We shall announce our proposals for the revenue support grant settlement for 1994-95, including SSAs, in the late autumn, and then consult in the usual way.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library the representations which he has received in respect of his review of standard spending assessments.

Mr. Gummer: I shall arrange for copies of the representations received so far from local authorities on the review of standard spending assessments to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the annual change in the total standard spending assessments for all English local authorities from 1990-91 to 1993-94; and what were the annual increases in the element for the area cost adjustment over the same period.

Mr. Baldry: The total of standard spending assessments for all local authorities in England for 1993-94 was £36,622 million, of which £1,332 million—3·6 per cent. of the total—was allocated on the basis of the area cost adjustment. The annual percentage changes since 1990-91 have been as follows:

Year	Percentage changes
	Total SSA	Amount allocated on area cost adjustment
1990-91 to 1991-92	[illegible]	37·7
1991-92 to 1992-93	6·8	14·1
1992-93 to 1993-94	2·9	7·4

Note: For the purposes of comparison with 1993-94, the 1992-93 figures have been adjusted to allow for the transfer of certain local authority responsibilities, most notably for further education.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the opencast mining applications in the north-west since January 1990 indicating where approval (a) has been given to original or revised application without appeal and (b) has been given following appeal and those applications rejected indicating where such rejection has been determined following an appeal.

Mr. Baldry: This information is not held centrally.

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide details from the maintenance and servicing record of the quantity and type of ozone-destroying chemicals used annually in his Department's refrigeration and air conditioning equipment for servicing and in leakages; and what proportion is removed for recycling.

Mr. Yeo: Tollgate house, Bristol is the only building occupied by my Department where refrigeration plant within the air conditioning system contains ozone depleting substances. It is estimated that consumption of R22 per annum is:

150 kg utilised
15 kg reclaimed

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many refrigeration and air conditioning systems in the Department are equipped with automatic leak detection systems.

Mr. Yeo: Tollgate house, Bristol is the only building occupied by my Department where refrigeration plant within the air conditioning system contains ozone-depleting substances. There are no automatic leak detection facilities but an exercise is under way to consider the removal of these substances. The installation of automatic leak detectors will be considered in the light of the consultants' report.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how his departmental green Minister has promoted protection of the ozone layer with specific policy measures; which possible measures have been considered and rejected; and on what grounds.

Mr. Yeo: My Department's green housekeeping policy statement states the measures we are taking to protect the ozone layer. These are: (1) to continue to eliminate products containing halons, chlorofluorocarbons, carbon tetrachloride, 1,1,1—trichloroethan and other ozone-depleting substances well in advance of the Government's responses to international agreements and EC regulations; (2) to extend the leakage prevention programme through regular servicing of all refrigeration and air conditioning equipment containing ozone-depleting substances in compliance with professional codes of practice. No measures for promoting protection of the ozone layer have been considered but rejected.

Public Appointments

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the number of public appointments for which he is responsible.

Mr. Gummer: I am responsible for 528 appointments to 43 public bodies. In addition, I appoint the rent assessment panel.

Blind and Partially Sighted People

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's policy on which information produced by his Department is published in alternative media to standard print such as Braille, tape or large print.

Mr. Gummer: The decision to provide a publication in media suitable for blind and partially sighted people is taken in the light of the available publicity budgets and the likely number of such people among the target audience.

Recent examples of publications which have been produced in such media include leaflets on the community charge and the council tax.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements his Department makes to ensure that blind and partially sighted people have access to information produced by his Department where it has not been published in alternative media such as Braille, large print or tape.

Mr. Gummer: All the publicity material published by my Department is distributed to a very wide range of media outlets, including broadcasters, for them to report on. Information is also made available to the general public through the offices of such organisations as voluntary groups, citizens advice bureaux and local authorities.

Planning Applications

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average waiting time for the approval of planning applications by (a) Harrogate borough council and (b) all other authorities.

Mr. Baldry: On Tuesday 20 July 1993, my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Planning launched the planning performance checklists, copies of which have been placed in the House Library. The checklists show the relative performance of local planning authorities against the Government's target that 80 per cent. of applications for planning permission should be decided within eight weeks. In the year to 31 March 1993, Harrogate district council decided 51·3 per cent. of applications within eight weeks. Nationally, during the same period, local planning authorities decided 63 per cent. of applications within eight weeks.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received all the evidence he requires to make a judgment in relation to the THORP review.

Mr. Yeo: A final decision will be taken after the further consultation announced by my right hon. Friend in his answer on 28 June, to the hon. Member for Norwich, North (Mr. Thompson) Official Report, column 392.

Housing (Disabled People)

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the report which his Department has prepared on housing services for disabled people.

Sir George Young: The report will be published in August.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for the management and disposal arising from the United Kingdom nuclear power programme of (a) the stockpile of plutonium, (b) vitrified high-level waste from spent fuel reprocessing, (c) intermediate-level waste from reprocessing and (d) spent fuel that is not reprocessed but placed in temporary storage.

Mr. Yeo: The policy for vitrified high-level waste from spent fuel reprocessing is to store it for at least 50 years before disposal. The arrangements for disposal have not yet been determined.

UK Nirex Ltd. is the nuclear industry body charged with the responsibility of developing new disposal facilities for low and intermediate-level wastes, including reprocessing waste. The work of Nirex to develop such facilities continues, and it will have to satisfy the planning and regulatory authorities that its proposals are acceptable. The relevant wastes will be stored until the facilities become available.

Plutonium and irradiated nuclear fuel are of potential value. It is for the owners to consider what they wish to do with such material and to satisfy the relevant authorities that their proposals are acceptable.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies have been carried out into the environmental and health implications of storing intermediate-level wastes arising from the reprocessing of foreign spent nuclear fuel in the thermal oxide reprocessing plant; and if he will give an estimate of the plutonium content of this waste per tonne of spent fuel reprocessed.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 14 July 1993]: I have been asked to reply.

Responsibility for the storage of intermediate-level wastes arising from reprocessing rests with British Nuclear Fuels plc as operators of the Sellafield site, subject to meeting the statutory requirements of the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate. The precise plutonium content of the waste will depend upon the operational performance of the thermal oxide reprocessing plant.

Local Authority Management

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next plans to meet representatives of the local authority associations to discuss the report on the internal management of local authorities.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend has regular two-monthly informal meetings with the chairmen of the three local authority associations at which a wide range of issues are discussed. The next meeting is planned to take place in September.

Council Rent Arrears

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by local authority the rent arrears owed by local authority tenants for the last year for which figures are available and the total rent owing.

Sir George Young: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Hertfordshire, North (Mr. Heald) on 20 July 1993, Official Report, columns 104-105.

Regulated Tenancies (Rents)

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what have been the figures for the increase in rent for regulated tenancies over each of the last five years; what percentage of tenants of regulated tenancies qualify for housing benefit; and what have been the comparable figures over each of the last five years.

Sir George Young: Regulated tenancies may or may not have a fair rent registered by the rent officer. The mean percentage increase on re-registration of fair rents in England for each of the last five years is as follows:

	Per cent.
1988	18
1989	19
1990	22

Rents may be re-registered every second year: these increases therefore cover a period of at least two years. Comparable figures on rent increases for regulated tenancies without a registered rent are not available.

We do not have statistics showing the proportion of regulated tenants who qualified for housing benefit over each of the last five years. The private renters survey 1990, however, estimated that 52 per cent. of regulated tenants with a registered rent and 35 per cent. of those without a registered rent were eligible for housing benefit. In comparison, the 1988 private renters survey found that 56 per cent. and 39 per cent. respectively would qualify.

Fire Regulations

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish England and Wales Approved Document B (Building Regulations, Fire); and if he will make a statement on the operation and effectiveness of the regulations in England and Wales since they came into force on 1 June 1992.

Mr. Baldry: The current edition of Approved Document B was published in December 1991, replacing an earlier version of 1985. The new approved document has been well received and appears to be operating effectively.

Oil Spills

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many oil spills of over 100 gallons from offshore installations there were in United Kingdom waters in (a) 1980 and (b) 1990.

Mr. Yeo: (a) 52; (b) 109.

European Coastal Strategy

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he supports the principle of a European coastal strategy; and what action he will take to urge other member state Governments to support the European Commission's attempt to establish one.

Mr. Yeo: At present, the Commission has not published a proposed directive on a European coastal strategy.

Drinking Water

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures his Department is taking to ensure that the incremental benefits of constantly increasing drinking water standards justify the cost to consumers of their implementation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: Changes to domestic requirements on drinking water are subject to consideration of cost and benefits as a matter of course.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further proposals he expects to bring forward within the EC and by the Government directly to improve further drinking water quality; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: We are considering the implications of the revised guidelines which are shortly to be published by the World Health Organisation, and will be playing our part in any negotiations initiated by the European Commission on the drinking water directive.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the measures introduced by the Government (a) directly and (b) because of EC directives, to improve drinking water standards since 1979.

Mr. Yeo: The legislative and administrative measures introduced by the Government to improve drinking water standards in England and Wales since 1979 result largely from the implementation of EC directive 80/778/EEC—the drinking water directive. They are as follows:

Department of the Environment circular 20/82, dated 19 August 1982;

The Water Act 1989 as consolidated by the Water Industry Act 1991;

The Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations 1989 [SI No. 1147], as amended by the Water Supply (Water Quality) (Amendment) Regulations 1989 and 1991 [SI Nos. 1384 and 1837 respectively]; and,

The Private Supplies Regulations 1991 [SI No. 2790].

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria are used to determine the time scales set for implementation of new drinking water quality standards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The time scales for implementation of any new drinking water quality standards proposed by the European Commission would be negotiated by member states in the Environment Council. Any changes to domestic standards, including dates of implementation, would take into account all relevant factors including the implications for water consumers.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the cost to each water company of the implementation of each of the EC and United Kingdom measures for improving drinking water standards since 1979.

Mr. Yeo: The total capital cost of improving drinking water quality in England and Wales in the period 1989-90 is estimated to be £2 billion, excluding the cost of improvements resulting from renovation of the distribution system. Comparable estimates for the period before 1989 are not available.

Housing (Tower Hamlets)

Mr. Peter Shore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the allocation to the London borough of Tower Hamlets under the housing investment programme in 1992; what is the estimate for 1993; and what have been the allocations in every year since 1979, in current and constant prices.

Sir George Young: The information requested is given in the table. The figures for 1990-91 and subsequent years are not directly comparable with those for earlier years because of the revisions to the capital finance system introduced in April 1990.

[1] Allocations for the years up to and including 1989-90 are final allocations, i.e. the initial allocation plus any increases to the initial allocation made in-year. The allocations figures for 1990-91 and subsequent years are the HIP allocations—housing annual capital guidelines plus specified capital grants—issued prior to the start of the financial year. These figures do not include any supplementary credit approvals issued during the year.
[2] Cash figures have been converted to 1993-94 price levels by excluding the effect of general inflation as measured by the GDP market prices deflator.
[3] From 1990-91, under the new capital finance system, the HIP allocation is an assessment of relative need for housing capital expenditure rather than a direct borrowing approval. Borrowing approval is now conveyed by the single, all service, basic credit approval.

Mr. Peter Shore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many families were accepted as homeless in the London borough of Tower Hamlets in 1992 or the latest available date; and how many were similarly accepted as homeless in each year since 1979.

Sir George Young: Local authorities report the number of households for whom they accept responsibility to secure permanent accommodation under the homelessness provisions of the housing acts in their quarterly P1(E) returns.

The figures for acceptances reported by Tower Hamlets in the years 1979 to 1992 were as follows:

Year	Reported acceptances
1979	687
1980	334
1981	332
1982	808
1983	189 (1)

1989	884
1990	1,142
1991	542 (2)
1992	851

[1] Not available.

The figures exclude households found to be intenationally homeless from the second quarter of 1991. The figures for 1983, 1987 and 1991 are partial; the figures in brackets indicate the number of quarters for which information was reported.

City Grant (Bradford)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the present position of the application for city grant by 3Ds Ltd. for the west end scheme in Bradford; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: My Department has made a formal offer of a city grant of £3·4 million to 3D Bradford Ltd. to aid the construction of a £11·7 million office development on a derelict site in the west end of Bradford and we are waiting to hear whether the company is prepared to go ahead.

Habitats Directive

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will issue the consultation document on the implementation of the EC directive on the conservation of natural habitats and of wild fauna and flora in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The Government are considering the best means of implementing the requirements of the EC habitats directive. Our proposals will be published shortly.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the environment when his Department expects to publish its consultation document on implementation of the habitats directive.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 22 July 1993]: The Government are considering the best means of implementing the requirements of the EC habitats directive. Our proposals will be published shortly.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether measures will be included in the consultation document on the implementation of the EC directive on the conservation of natural habitats and of wild fauna and flora in the United Kingdom to address the incidental capture and killing of small cetaceans in fishing nets as required under article 12(4); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The Government's proposals for implementation of the EC habitats directive paper will address the United Kingdom's obligations. Action is already being taken to deal with the conservation of small cetaceans and I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 11 June 1993 to the hon. Member for Pembroke (Mr. Ainger) Official Report, column 358.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures will be included in the biodiversity action plan to improve the conservation status of small cetaceans in United Kingdom waters and, in particular, to address the incidental capture and killing of marine mammals in fishing nets.

Mr Yeo: The biodiversity action plan will address the United Kingdom's obligations at a strategic level. Action is already being taken to deal with the conservation of small cetaceans and I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 11 June 1993 to the hon. Member for Pembroke (Mr. Ainger), Official Report, column 358.

Waste Management

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the environment (1) pursuant to his answers to the hon. Member for Gower (Mr. Wardell), Official Report, columns 101-2, if he will make a statement on the new waste management licensing system;

(2) if he will make it his policy to proceed with the introduction of economic instruments relating to waste management before finalising the regulations implementing the EC framework directive on waste.

Mr. Yeo: On the waste management licensing system, I refer to the answer I gave on 6 July, Official Report, column 80.

It is the Government's policy to use economic instruments in preference to regulation to achieve environmental goals. We have already introduced credits for recycling and we are actively considering whether to develop economic instruments to promote the reduction and recycling of waste and, if so, which instruments are likely to be most effective. There is no reason why these considerations should delay the introduction of the waste management licensing system.

Sellafield

Sir Giles Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Norwich, North (Mr. Thompson) of 28 June 1993, Official Report, column 392, whether he has received the information he requested from British Nuclear Fuels plc; when the second period of public consultation into the proposed new discharge authorisation for BNFL's Sellafield site will begin; when it will end; what other information, additional to the material provided by BNFL, he will be making available during the public consultation; who will assess the responses arising from the consultation process; and when he expects to be in a position to take a final decision on this issue.

Mr. Yeo: BNFL has provided the further information mentioned in my right hon. Friend's answer of 28 June to the hon. Member for Norwich, North, Official Report, column 392. The other material referred to in that answer will also be made available for public consultation which is exptected to start shortly and to last for two months. A final decision will be taken following this consultation.

Housing Association

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further plans he has for financing housing associations following the second report from the Environment Committee of Session 1992-93, HC 466, on the Housing Corporation.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Ms Jackson) on 15 July, Official Report, column 591.

Local Government Review

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many meetings have been held by Ministers with hon. Members to discuss the review of local government in England; and if he will list these meetings giving dates and the numbers of hon. Members present on each occasion.

Mr. Gummer: I and my ministerial colleagues frequently discuss with hon. Members a wide range of issues, including the local government review, and we welcome the opportunity to do so, whether formally in the Department or informally elsewhere. We keep no list of such discussions.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received in the course of his review of the standard spending assessment system concerning reform of the area cost adjustment formula.

Mr. Baldry: We have received representations from a large number of authorities about the area cost adjustment. These representations will be considered carefully as part of our review of standard spending assessments.

New Towns (Property Sales)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average amount paid to the Commission for New Towns for the sale of freehold properties to (a) private developers and (b) leaseholders in each year since 1979.

Sir George Young: This information is not readily available but will be placed in the Library of the House shortly.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many homes have been sold by the Commission for New Towns, and for what total sum, in each year since 1979.

Sir George Young: This information will be placed in the Library of the House.

Carbon Dioxide

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for completing the United Kingdom's carbon dioxide programme.

Mr. Gummer: In the first half of this year we initiated a wide-ranging debate on the United Kingdom's CO_2 programme. Issues discussed included the type of measures that the Government should take as part of the programme and the role of other organisations and groups outside government.

Our view has been that an effective and efficient national CO_2 programme requires a partnership approach. In the light of the positive response to the consultation exercise, we have concluded that the United Kingdom can create such a partnership.

The Government's role is to provide the right fiscal, regulatory and financial framework for the programme and to help disseminate advice and information on the many actions that can be taken to achieve savings. But it is decision makers in households and businesses throughout the country who will take the actions that will lead to lower emissions. The Government are looking to business groups, trade associations and voluntary and consumer groups to act as channels of information and encouragement to these decision makers. The energy industries have an important part to play in promoting the efficient use of energy and in ensuring that energy is produced in economically and environmentally sound ways.

Several measures have already been announced. These include those announced in the March Budget to increase the price of energy in the domestic and transport sectors, the establishment of the energy saving trust to provide financial incentives to energy efficiency, and an increase in the objective for renewable energy. These measures together are expected to stimulate savings amounting to two thirds of the target.

On Wednesday last week, my hon. Friend the Minister for Energy announced his proposals for further renewable energy orders under the non-fossil fuel obligation, in pursuit of the new objective for renewable energy.

Today I am able to announce a step forward in the trial of local energy advice centres being conducted by the energy saving trust with finance from the Energy Efficiency Office. The first franchises to run these centres are now being offered to successful applicants, and the centres will be operational by October.

We have considered what additional measures should be taken to complete the programme. We have concluded that we should take further action to help business to make energy savings. We will strengthen the Energy Efficiency Office's programmes of advice and information aimed at business and will be discussing with business groups how to obtain the maximum response. We expect that significant additional savings can be achieved in this sector.

We recognise that public sector bodies should provide a lead. We will be setting further targets for the Government estate which should take energy use by central Government down to well below 80 per cent. of 1990 levels by the year 2000. The Government are looking to other public sector bodies to adopt similarly stringent targets.

We will also continue to provide information and encouragement to households to use energy efficiently. We will increase the resources devoted to this, working with the energy saving trust, to reinforce the impact of the trust.

Concern was expressed during consultations about the prospect of rising transport emissions. We believe that, taking account of the views expressed during consultation, it would be reasonable to work towards further savings from transport by the year 2000 over and above the 1·5 MtC expected to be saved as a result of the fuel duty increases announced in the March Budget. We will be discussing with interested parties how such savings can best be realised.

The Government also take the view that energy should be produced and delivered in a way that keeps CO_2 emissions at the lowest cost-effective level consistent with other environmental goals. This is primarily the responsibility of the energy industries. We will be working towards the achievement of 5,000 MW of combined heat and power capacity by the year 2000, an increase of 1,000 MW on the previous target.

The framework for the United Kingdom's CO_2 programme is now in place. Many organisations have indicated their willingness to participate in the programme. We will be discussing with those organisations the contribution they can make in the light of the further Government action announced today, in order for the full programme to be published at the end of the year.

Urban Priority Areas

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his review of urban priority areas will be completed.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 22 July 1993]: Consultation is continuing on the outcome of our contractors' work to assess urban conditions in the light of the 1991 census. The contractors are carrying out further analytical work. This consultation and further work should be completed by the autumn.

Local Government Associations

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next plans to meet the chairmen of the Association of District Councils, the Association of Metropolitan Authorities and the Association of County Councils.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 22 July 1993]: My right hon. Friend plans to meet the chairmen again in September, at the next of their regular two-monthly meetings.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Gummer: The Government continue to help small businesses, through improvements to the business climate, through deregulation and through specific programmes of support and assistance.

My Department's Energy Efficiency Office launched the energy management assistance scheme in April 1992 to help smaller businesses reduce their energy costs. The scheme provides grants towards consultants' costs in identifying energy savings and helping in their achievement. Over the last 12 months, more than 1,500 grants, averaging about £400 each, have been paid to small manufacturing and commercial enterprises.

In partnership with the Department of Trade and Industry, my Department is funding a programme to raise awareness of environmental issues among small firms to help them improve their environmental performance. This follows a recommendation made by the Advisory Committee on Business and the Environment. We are jointly supporting 10 local initiatives, which bring together the private sector, the community and local authorities. My Department is supporting projects in Sheffield and Blackburn; a further three will be announced in due course. The programme will also focus on specific industrial sectors, working with trade associations to develop a programme of help and guidance for small businesses.

We continue to review the impact of the integrated pollution control and local authority air pollution control systems on small businesses. This has resulted in the laying of new regulations, the publication of a consultation paper reviewing the scope of the controls, and the issue of guidance to local authorities on exempting certain small industrial processes. Further proposed deregulatory initiatives in relation to the operation of both systems will be of benefit to small businesses.

In November 1992, my Department published planning policy guidance note No. 4, "Industrial and Commercial Development and Small Firms". This includes a section on how local planning authorities can help small firms through the planning system.

The Planning Inspectorate executive agency continues successfully to work to performance targets for prompt handling of planning appeals, including those for small businesses.

For small firms in the construction industry, we ask for information on a sampling basis to minimise the burden of form filling. We give feedback to small firms on the use of raw data provided to us to indicate the cyclical nature of the construction industry. On research, we encourage better dissemination of results on the construction industry to make it user friendly for smaller firms.

We continue to tackle bureaucracy in the main inner-city programmes. City challenge has been simplified and grant regimes reduced from seven to three. The application form for derelict land grant has been simplified and we have taken through the legislation to set up the urban regeneration agency which will integrate three separate programmes in to a single grant regime.

My Department monitors all its programmes and publishes details of a wide range of outputs and targets in its annual report.

Computer Consultancies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the computer consultancies employed by Ordnance Survey, since November 1991, the tasks for which they were engaged, and the total cost to his Department.

Mr. Baldry: The chief executive will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from D. Rhind to Mr. John McAllion, dated 26 January 1993:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about Ordnance Survey expenditure on computer consultancy contracts since November 1991.

The total expenditure on such contracts was £463,000. I attach a list of the contracts awarded showing the name of the contractor and the subject of the consultancy assignment.

A copy of this letter and enclosure will be deposited in the House of Commons Library and the Public Information Office.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Housing Benefit

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to review the regulations governing entitlement to housing benefit in the cases of those claimants whose savings exceed the prescribed limit only by virtue of delayed back-payment of other allowances by the Benefits Agency; and what action he has taken in the case of the couple in Forest Hill, London SE23, raised with him by the London borough of Lewisham.

Mr. Burt: All of the income-related benefits treat back payments of these allowances in the same way. We have no plans at present to change these arrangements. In the case of the couple in Forest Hill, an interim reply was sent to the London borough of Lewisham on 23 July 1993. I will write to the hon. Member with further details shortly.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what evidence he has received about the administration of housing benefit; and what plans he has to improve the speed and standard of service.

Mr. Burt: The day-to-day administration of housing benefit is the responsibility of local authorities. The Department routinely collects statistical information from authorities about housing benefit and council tax benefit including information about the way that the benefits are administered. Evidence shows that in 1991-92, around 75 per cent. of all housing benefit claims were processed within 14 days of receipt of all the necessary information.

The Department has also received a number of reports, including "Remote Control and Benefits Administration —a Management Handbook" from the Audit Commission and "Managing Housing Benefit" from the Accounts Commission. Both commissions have emphasised that authorities can do much by improved organisation and by setting and monitoring standards to improve the way they deliver housing benefit.

Households Below Average Income

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the average disposable income at (a) actual and (b) April 1993 prices per adult, distinguishing those under and those over the pensionable ages, and per child applying the appropriate equivalence scale according to age, for the two lowest decile groups in the latest households below average income analysis for 1979, 1988-89 and 1990-91, before and after housing costs.

Mr. Burt: The information is in the tables.

The results do not show what has happened to the income of the groups over time. They reflect changes in composition of the bottom and second deciles (see note 2).

Median net equivalised household income in the two lowest whole population deciles for pensioners adults, non-pensioner adults and children, 1979, 1988-89 and 1990-91 in actual prices[1] and in April 1993 prices

Notes:

1. The estimates have been calculated by taking the median income of pensioners, non-pensioners and children in each of the two bottom deciles of the total Households Below Average Income distribution.

2. The HBAI publication does not present results in the form requested here. The results in the form requested cannot be interpreted as indicating the incomes of these groups have gone up or down over the period. Any income changes will reflect shifts of the number of people in each group—pensioners/non-pensioners/children—from one decile group to another. For example, if pensioners incomes remained unchanged but there was a shift of pensioners from the top of the bottom decile into the second decile, the median income of the pensioners in the bottom decile in these tables would show a fall. Conversely, if pensioners incomes again remain the same, but there was a shift of pensioners from the second decile into the bottom decile, the median income of the pensioners in the bottom decile in these tables would show a rise. But in both those examples the real incomes amongst pensioners did not change. For information on changes in income of low-income pensioners and non-pensioners see Table A5 of HBAI 1979—1990-91.
3. All estimates are subject to sampling error which may affect the validity of comparisons between groups at a point in time and over time. More information about sampling errors can be found in appendix 5 of "Households Below Average Income", a copy of which is in the Library.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the equivalent monetary value in pound per week at April 1993 prices, following table A2 of the latest HBAI report, in 1979, 1988-89 and 1990-91, before and after housing costs, of the decile medians of the two poorest decile groups, the poorest quintile and the total population mean of (a) a single adult, (b) a couple with no children, (c) a couple with one child aged three, (d) a couple with one child aged 16, (e) a couple with two children aged three and eight, (f) a couple with three children aged three, eight and 11, (g) a couple with three children aged 11, 16 and 17 years, (h) a single adult with children, (i) all households with children equivalised and (j) all households equivalised.

Mr. Burt: The information has been placed in the Library.

The estimates follow table A2 of Households Below Average Income (HBAI) 1979—1990-91. It is not possible to give equivalent monetary values for the requested groups (h), (i) and (j) as the calculation of these figures is dependent on the number and age of children in each household. The money values for the bottom quintiles for family groups is provided in table A5 of HBAI.

The information that can be provided is subject to the same qualifications as HBAI 1979—1990-91, in particular paragraph 1.4 which points out that the results do not track what happens to a particular set of individuals and are as likely to be influenced by changes in the mix of groups as changes in income levels within each group.

Disability Benefits

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list all the changes made since 1979 in benefits for disabled people; for each case where there are savings, how much has been saved to date; and how much is projected to be saved up to (a) 2000 and (b) 2025.

Mr. Scott: A list of 65 changes made since 1979 to incapacity benefits and benefits for disabled people has been placed in the Library. Of the 65 changes, 14 relate to savings measures and are identified with an asterisk, 46 incurred costs and one change involved a transfer of expenditure. An estimate of the savings in each case to date and projected as requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. It is not possible to provide projections as far ahead as 2025 since they would depend on a large number of factors which cannot be accurately forecast.

Caring

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has for changes to the benefits system in recognition of the costs incurred in caring.

Mr. Scott: Invalid care allowance, the main benefit for carers, has been uprated consistently in line with the retail prices index. The weekly earnings limit has been increased in each of the past four years and is currently £50, net of allowable expenses. In addition carers who receive either income support, housing benefit or council tax benefit are entitled to the carer premium. The earnings disregard for carers in receipt of any of those benefits was increased to £15 from April this year.

Some 195,000 carers benefit at a current cost in 1992-93 of £366 million. We have no plans to make further changes to the benefits.

Correspondence

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will acknowledge the letter of Ms J. J. Lowmass of 28 April to the head of section, disability allowance, Blackpool—his reference JE 553986C Sherwood—together with subsequent correspondence, including a letter to himself from Ms J. J. Lowmass and Mr. E. M. Sherwood dated 23 June; and when he expects his Department to be able to deal with the matter.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. M. Bichard to Mr. Peter Temple-Morris, dated 23 July 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking if he will acknowledge the letter of Ms J. J. Lowmass of 28th April to the Head of Section, Disability Allowance, Blackpool (his reference JE 553986C Sherwood) together with subsequent correspondence, including a letter to himself from Ms J. J. Lowmass and Mr. E. M. Sherwood dated 23rd June; and when he expects his Department to be able to deal with the matter.

Ms Lowmass wrote to the Attendance Allowance Unit (AAU) on the 17 November 1992 asking for confirmation that her letter of 1 September 1992, which detailed a change in Stephen's circumstances, had been received.

The AAU which was dealing with Stephen's claim at the time (Attendance Allowance (AA) for customers under the age of 65 became DLA from 6 April 1992, but no conversion had taken place at that time on Stephen's case) wrote to Mrs. Lowmass stating that they had no record of receiving this letter. A copy of this letter was then provided by Ms Lowmass in November 1992.

You will be aware of the delays that have resulted due to the backlog of work on DLA. Unfortunately, because of these delays it was March 1993 before the file was referred to an Adjudication Officer who decided that Stephen was not entitled to the care component of DLA, and advised Stephen's parents accordingly.

Further correspondence was received from Ms Lowmass and Mr Sherwood on the 28 April and 28 June respectively. The letter of 28 April is now being treated as a request for a review.

The present situation is that a review claim pack was issued to Ms Lowmass by first class Post on 15 July 1993. Ms Lowmass was given the opportunity to complete the pack by phone but declined. When the pack is returned it will be dealt with as a matter of priority.

This case has clearly not been handled with the efficiency I would expect. Please convey my sincere apologies to Ms Lowmass and Mr. Sherwood for the delays they have suffered and for any distress or inconvenience caused.

I am pleased to say that the overall situation at the DLA Unit is much improved and 80 per cent. of new cases are now being cleared inside 30 days.

I thank you for bringing this matter to my attention and for giving me the opportunity to explain the situation. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Hospital Patients (Pensions)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many state pensioners in York have had their pensions suspended in the last 12 months because of a long stay as a hospital in-patient.

Mr. Hague: The administration of benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. M. Bichard to Mr. Hugh Bayley, dated 26 July 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many State pensioners in York have had their pensions suspended in the last twelve months because of a long stay as a hospital in-patient.

I regret that the information is not available in the form requested and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. However, I can inform you that on 30 September 1992, the latest date for which information is held, a total of 47,170 pensioners (0·51 per cent. of the national pensioner population) had their Retirement Pension reduced because they were receiving treatment as hospital in-patients.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Disability Working Allowance

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give details of the assumptions made in his Department's estimates of the cost of disability working allowance in the years 1993-94, 1994-95, 1995-96 and 2000-01; and on what grounds his Department no longer expects to make savings as a result of the introduction of this benefit.

Mr. Scott: The estimates of the gross cost of disability working allowance in each year are based on a projection of the increase in the case load. There will be savings in other benefits to off-set the gross cost but until further analysis has been done it is not possible to quantify these. The further analysis cannot be completed until we have the results of research which the Policy Studies Institute has been commissioned to conduct.

Income Support

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many 16 and 17-year-olds for each month since January 1992 have made applications for income support on grounds of extreme hardship by region and for Great Britain as a whole, shown separately for male and female; how many have been granted or refused; what information he has about the grounds on which applications were turned down; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to her on 21 May 1992 at columns 238-9 and on 30 October 1992 at columns 923-4. Such information as is available about claims after September 1992 is in the tables. Some people will have made more than one claim.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many recipients of income support who have deductions for voluntary unemployment are also subject to other deductions; and what is the average amount per person of these deductions.

Mr. Burt: There are 1,000 recipients of income support whose benefit is reduced because of voluntary unemployment who also have other deductions. The average amount of these other deductions is £5·15 (£19·86 including the voluntary unemployment deduction).

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many overpayments of income support have been caused by a failure to report a reduction in interest rates.

Mr. Burt: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total amount spent by local authorities in Wales on housing benefit in the last three available financial years.

Mr. Burt [pursuant to his reply, 19 July 1993, c. 73]: I am advised that the reply contained incorrect information. The correct information is:

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants who receive the lower rate of income support for persons aged under 25 years and are living away from home also have deductions; and what is the average amount per person of these deductions.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many recipients of income support had reductions in their benefit (a) including and (b) excluding deductions for voluntary unemployment, but excluding payments of current mortgage interest in each year since 1989.

Mr. Burt: The information available is in the table.

Note:
1. All figures have been rounded to the nearest thousand.
2. The figures exclude cases with deductions solely for payment of current mortgage interest and arrears.
3. Recipients with deductions for mortgage interest payments are included in the figures if they also have other deductions.
4. Recipients with the voluntary unemployment reduction may be included in (b) if they have other deductions.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants who receive the lower rate of income support for person aged under 25 years also have deductions; and what is the average amount per person of these deductions.

Mr. Burt: There are 85,000 recipients receiving the lower rate of income support for a person aged less than 25 years who have deductions from benefit. The average amount of the deductions is £4·85. The corresponding figures where benefit is also reduced because of voluntary unemployment are 98,000 and £6·13.

Notes:
1. The figures have been rounded to the nearest thousand, average amounts are correct to the nearest penny.
2. Recipients with the lower rate of income support for those aged under 25 have been identified on the basis that they are under 25, single and without dependants, and do not therefore qualify for the higher rate of benefit.

Mr. Burt: Such information as is available is in the table. Information prior to January 1991 is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Incomes

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the percentage change in income during the period 1979 to 1987, both before and after housing costs, of each percentile group in the population.

Mr. Burt: The information for each decile median is in the tables. Greater disaggregation would not provide statistically reliable results.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 16 July 1992, Official Report, columns 946-47, what was the average equivalised income at April 1993 prices of the poorest 20 per cent. and richest 20 per cent. before and after housing costs for 1979, 1981, 1987, 1988-89 and 1992-93.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the total expenditure in 1993-94 on housing benefit broken down between (a) council tenants, (b) housing association tenants and (c) private tenants; and what these figures would have been if the uprating of the applicable amount for each type of household had been 1 per cent. below the retail prices index.

Mr. Burt: It is not currently possible to disaggregate expenditure of rent allowance between housing association and private sector tenants. Estimates for 1993-94, are that housing benefit expenditure will be £4,920 million in respect of council tenants in the form of rent rebates and £3,250 million in respect of housing associations tenants in the form of rent allowances.

If the 1993-94 uprating had been 1 per cent less than the RPI, the figures would be £4,885 million and £3,240 million respectively.

Uprating Costs

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of total expenditure in 1993-94 on (a) income support, (b) housing benefit and (c) council tax benefit; and what these figures would have been if the uprating of the applicable amount for each type of applicant had been 1 per cent. less than the retail prices index.

Mr. Burt: It is estimated that total expenditure on income support, housing benefit and council tax benefit for 1993-94 will be £16,485 million, £8,170 million and £1,630 million respectively.

The estimated expenditure, if income-related benefit rates had been uprated in 1993-94 by 1 per cent. less than the RPI, would be £16,390 million, £8,125 million and £1,615 million respectively.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Hague: The Government continue to help small businesses, through improvements to the business climate, through deregulation and through specific programmes of support and assistance.

Measures operated by the Department to assist small business include:

Production of a self-employed starter pack "Working for Yourself". This assists the newly self-employed in understanding their National Insurance liability.

Introduction, from April 1993, of a quarterly billing system for self-employed National Insurance contributions.

Other measures aimed at business in general, which should help small businesses, include:

For national insurance contributions (NIC) changes made from April 1993 to align the treatment of certain expenses with PAYE rules.

Setting up of a working group, on which small businesses are represented, to consider further options for reducing the administrative burden caused by the operation of different rules for PAYE and NIC purposes in defining earnings and expenses.

Establishing a working group of employers' organisations, which includes representatives of small business, to examine the scope for removing or easing the administrative burdens imposed by the statutory sick pay scheme.

The Department has a system to monitor proposals which impact on business, to ensure that the needs and costs to small businesses are taken into account, although there are no performance indicators specifically for monitoring achievements in this area. However, we attach particular importance to action taken to help small businesses and will continue to explore further ways of doing so.

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list all those services or functions contracted out in his Department and agencies, since November 1991, in which the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were not applied.

Mr. Hague: Whether or not TUPE applies in any particular case will depend on the nature of the work awarded and the contractor's proposals for carrying the work out.

The following services have been contracted out since November 1991 without application of the TUPE regulations:

Business information

Blind and Partially Sighted People

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is his Department's policy on which information produced by his Department is published in alternative media to standard print such as Braille, tape or large print;

(2) what arrangements his Department makes to ensure that blind and partially sighted people have access to information produced by his Department where it has not been published in alternative media such as Braille, large print or tape.

Mr. Scott: Decisions to publish material in forms other than standard print are taken on a case by case basis. Currently the Department has the following number of publications available nationally in leaflets, tapes and Braille.

Four benefits audio tapes
Two benefits large-print leaflets—individual requests or information obtainable from the benefit inquiry line
Nineteen general social security leaflets
One child Support Agency leaflet in Braille
One child Support Agency tape
Two disability working allowance booklets
One disability working allowance audio tape
One disability working allowance brochure in large print
Two family credit leaflet tapes

Blind and partially sighted people and their representatives can ring the Department's range of telephone advice services. In particular, the benefits inquiry line gives free confidential advice and information for all social security benefits for people with disabilities. Callers then receive Braille or large print as required. The benefits inquiry line also completes forms over the telephone and sends Braille copies to the caller for signing.

Blind and partially sighted people can also ring or visit their local office for a personal interview. Home visits can be arranged if needed.

The Department's advertising campaigns are supported by tape or Braille publications.

The advertising campaign to publicise the new disability benefits in 1992 was the first such campaign to be signed for deaf people.

Lone Parents

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his most recent estimate of the number of one-parent families; and what percentage of the heads of lone-parent families are aged (a) under 20, (b) 20 to 25, (c) over 25 years and (d) female.

Mr. Burt: The number of lone parent families with dependent children in Great Britain is provisionally estimated from the 1991 census of population to be 1·27 million.

Information on the age and sex of lone parents is not yet available from 1991 census of population but is scheduled to be published next year in the Household and Family Composition Volume, a copy of which will be placed in the Library.

However, data from the General Household Survey for the years 1989 to 1991 give the following estimates for the percentages of lone parent families in Great Britain with the stated characteristics.

	Per cent.
Aged under 20	2
Aged 20 to 25 inclusive	11
Aged over 25	88
Female	92

Note: Totals may not sum due to rounding.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lone parents there are in (a) Inverclyde, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole; and how many and what proportion of income support claimants are lone parents in each area.

Mr. Burt: Provisional estimates of the number of lone parent families with dependent children in 1991 are as follows: (a) Inverclyde 3,200, (b) Strathclyde, 69,400, and (c) Scotland 132,000[1].

Data on the number of lone parent families in receipt of income support in individual locations are not available. However, the total number of lone parents receiving income support in Scotland in 1992 was 106,000[2], representing 20 per cent. of all income support claimants in Scotland.

Data Processing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the numbers of staff by grade that are employed in his Department and agencies in the automatic data processing functional specialism.

Mr. Burt: The information is in the table:

Grade	Numbers
SEO	326
HEO	937
EO	1,285
AO	596
AA	821
Total	3,965

Notes:
The figures show those staff entitled to receive an automatic data processing (ADP) pay allowance as at 22 July 1993. They may:
(a) include some staff who have transferred to other duties but retain the ADP pay allowance on a mark-time basis* and
(b) exclude some staff in executive grades who have not completed the qualifying period of receipt of the ADP pay allowance.

Spending

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which other EC countries have reduced social security spending in the last year; and what information he has on the changes they have introduced.

Mr. Scott: Measures to contain the growth in social security spending have recently been announced in a number of EC countries, including France, Germany, Italy and the Netherlands. Information on the changes in EC countries is regularly collected by the Department.

Disabled Voluntary Workers

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to allow disabled voluntary workers to continue to carry out unpaid work without loss of welfare benefits; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Disabled voluntary workers can carry out unpaid work without loss of social security benefits as long as they continue to satisfy the entitlement conditions. We are currently reviewing the benefit system and will be looking at benefits for disabled people in that context. No decisions have been taken.

Benefits

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of (i) taxpayers and (ii) tax-paying households in receipt of (a) family credit, (b) housing benefit, (c) community charge benefit, (d) retirement pension, (e) unemployment benefit and income support to an unemployed claimant, (f) statutory sick pay, (g) widows' benefits, (h) industrial death benefit, (i) invalid care allowance, (j) invalidity allowance paid with a retirement pension, (k) statutory maternity pay and (l) at least one of those benefits.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is not readily available. I will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Private Pensions

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many contracted-out rebates to private pension plans are currently outstanding; how many are due to inadequate or inaccurate information supplied by employers or insurance companies; how many are due to the application forms APP1 being misplaced; and when he expects the backlog of rebates will now be paid.

Mr. Hague: The information requested is not available. the Contributions Agency pays rebates outstanding as soon as it is able to establish entitlement. We are actively pursuing a satisfactory solution to the problem of misplaced APP1s with the Association of British Insurers (ABI).

Yugoslavia

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how Her Majesty's Government administers the payment of social benefit entitlements to recipients living in Yugoslavia, pursuant to United Nations Security Council resolution 724; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how his Department administers the obligations of United Nations Security Council resolution 757 on payment of social benefits to civilians living in Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether foreign pensions, child and other social benefit entitlement held by persons resident in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia have been frozen; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: The United Nation Security Council Committee, established pursuant to resolution 724, ruled that it was up to individual Governments to decide whether to pay social benefits to people in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). In cases where Governments decide to make such payments, it was up to the Government concerned to devise a mechanism for doing so without contravening the mandatory sanctions established by the Security Council under resolution 757. In accordance with this ruling, Her Majesty's Government informed the committee that on humanitarian grounds the United Kingdom would continue to pay social security benefits to beneficiaries in the federal republic. United Kingdom benefit entitlement is not, therefore, frozen. We are continuing to send payable orders to the federal republic by post.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for support have been made to the Independent Living (1993) Fund; how many offers of support have been made by the trustees; how many awards are now in payment; and how many cases there have been where the trustees of the fund have been unable to reach agreement on the sharing of responsibility with local authority social services departments.

Mr. Scott: I am informed by the director of the Independent Living (1993) Fund that as of 19 July 1993, 260 applications for support had been received by the fund. Of these 67 were rejected because they did not meet the basic eligibility criteria for help from the fund. The remainder are at various stages in the application process, and 14 offers of help have been made. There are four awards that have been accepted and put into payment. There has been one case where an applicant gained the initial support of a local authority which then failed to agree a care package with the fund.

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out in detail how accountability is to be made to Parliament for the use of public funds provided to the trustees of the Independent Living (1993) Fund and the Independent Living (Extension) Fund.

Mr. Scott: The published Government accounting rules and procedures, as set out in "Government Accounting —A guide on accounting and financial procedures for the use of Government Departments", apply to both the Department and the funds in accounting to Parliament for this use of public money.

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assurances he has received from statutory and charitable services that they will be able to fill the gap created by the decision of the trustees of the Independent Living (1993) Fund to exclude seriously disabled people who are terminally ill from eligibility for support from the fund.

Mr. Scott: The aim of the Independent Living (1993) Fund is to provide long-term support for severely disabled people who wish to live independently.

It is the statutory responsibility of health authorities and local social service departments to make provision for people who are terminally ill. Support for such people is also provided by charitable and voluntary organisations.

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he is satisfied that care of severely disabled people who are terminally ill will now normally be provided on a cost-effective basis following the decision of the trustees of the Independent Living (1993) Fund to exclude the terminally ill from the scope of the fund.

Mr. Scott: The action of the trustees of the Independent Living (1993) Fund in no way detracts from the responsibility of health authorities and local social services departments to provide care and support for terminally ill people in a cost-effective way.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many asylum seekers who receive income support also have deductions; and what was the average amount per person of these deductions.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is not available.

Earnings

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much income net of tax, national insurance and benefit reductions, is retained out of each £1 per week increase in gross earnings by (a) a single adult aged 26 years earning £132 per week, (b) a lone parent with one child aged nine years earning £136 per week and (c) two adults with two children aged 12 and 14 years earning £196 per week, on the assumption that each is paying rent of £48 per week and council tax of £10 per week.

Mr. Burt: The information is in the table. Marginal deduction rates in excess of 90 pence in the pound are estimated to affect less than half of 1 per cent. of the working population.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Criminal Offences

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what criminal offences she has introduced in the last five years under delegated legislation.

Mr. Jack: The powers to introduce criminal offences in statutory instruments are provided for in primary legislation. It is estimated that in the last five years the Department has been responsible for 55 statutory instruments introducing criminal offences which still exist.

Wheat

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the average on-farm selling price of wheat in the United Kingdom for each of the years from 1979 to 1993 at actual and also at constant prices, showing the 1979 price as 100.

Mr. Jack: Information for Great Britain is set out in the table. Comparable information for the United Kingdom is not available.

Data Processing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the numbers of staff by grade that are employed in her Department and agencies in the automatic data processing functional specialism.

Mr. Jack: The number of automatic data processing functional specialists employed in the Department and agencies, by grade is as follows:

Officers	Numbers
Executive Officers	132
Higher Executive Officers	140
Senior Executive Officers	78
Total	350

Fishing By-catches

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many reports of by-caught marine mammals have been received by his Department under the voluntary reporting scheme since its introduction; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Since the scheme for voluntary reporting was introduced on 1 January 1992, there has been only one report for England and Wales which recorded the incidental catch of three common porpoises. Officials are at present considering how to encourage fishermen to report as many incidents as possible under this scheme.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what measures her Department will be taking to monitor the incidental capture and killing of small cetaceans in fisheries and to ensure that this capture does not have a significant negative impact on the species, as required under the EC directive on the conservation of natural habitats and of wild fauna and flora;

(2) what measures are being taken to fulfil the commitment made under the agreement on the conservation of small cetaceans of the Baltic and North seas to reduce by-catches of small cetaceans in fisheries and to prevent fishing gear being lost or discarded at sea.

(3) what measures her Department will be taking to meet the requirements of the resolution on harbour porpoises in the north Atlantic and Baltic seas, which was co-sponsored by the United Kingdom Government and adopted at the recent meeting of the International Whaling Commission, to (a) collect data on the by-catch mortality level of harbour porpoises and (b) to give high priority to reducing by-catches of harbour porpoises.

Mr. Jack: On 1 January 1992, United Kingdom fisheries departments introduced a reporting scheme seeking information from fishermen on incidental by-catches of marine mammals including the gear involved. The information from this scheme together with data from the 1994 project funded by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Department of the Environment, other North sea states and the EC to assess small cetacean populations in the Baltic sea, North sea and channel will help to enable us to make an informed judgment of the extent of fisheries by-catches of small cetaceans and the impact they might have on the species.

MAFF and DOE are also funding work into the use of sonar reflectors to warn cetaceans away from fishing nets. Discarding of fishing gear at sea is an offence unless undertaken in accordance with a licence under part II of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985.

Blind and Partially Sighted People

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is her Department's policy on which information produced by her Department is published in alternative media to standard print such as Braille, tape or large print.

Mr. Jack: MAFF aims to publish as much information as possible in formats which are readily accessible to a wide variety of users. The Department has recently responded to the needs of blind and partially sighted people by publishing one of its "Food Sense" information booklets in Braille, large print and audio-cassette versions. This was done in close co-operation with the Royal National Institute for the Blind, and we hope it will be the forerunner of similar ventures in the future.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will publish the evidence she has on whether the number of cows affected by bovine spongiform encephalopathy is falling.

Mr. Soames: The detailed epidemiological evidence of the effects of the ruminant feed ban on the number of suspected cases of BSE being reported was published in the progress report which was placed in the Library of the House in my reply of 27 May, Official Report, column 689, and updated in my reply of 14 July, Official Report, columns 544-45.

I have arranged for a graph to be placed in the Library of the House which brings up to date the information presented in figure 1 of this report.

Equine Viral Arteritis

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of equine viral arteritis have been reported to date in the current year within each member state of the European Community.

Mr. Soames: We have no comprehensive or reliable information on the number of outbreaks of equine viral arteritis (EVA) in other member states.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which European Community member states currently designate equine viral arteritis as a notifiable disease; and what plans she has to embark on such a classification in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Soames: There is no requirement in EC law for equine viral arteritis (EVA) to be made notifiable, but I am informed that the disease is notifiable in Italy.

The Government have decided that, for the following reasons, EVA should not be made notifiable. First, there is no EC requirement to do so. Secondly, movement restrictions would have to be applied to horses on infected premises and could not be removed from those animals that were permanent carriers. This would cause financial hardship out of all proportion to the severity of the disease.

The United Kingdom thoroughbred industry has for some time operated a voluntary code of practice for the prevention and control of EVA, which includes guidance on the appropriate measures to prevent the introduction and spread of the disease. The code is considered to be an effective means for stud owners and others to protect their animal health status, and its use is commended to all sectors of the equine industry.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list each occasion on which her Department was issued with warnings of inadequate testing arrangements in Poland by the Animal Health Trust prior to the recent outbreak of equine viral arteritis in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Soames: On two occasions, the Animal Health Trust has drawn to the Department's attention seropositive test results for equine viral arteritis virus in imported horses accompanied by Polish certification. However, on neither occasion has there been any conclusive evidence of inadequate testing arangements in Poland.

Hens

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what rules or guidance her Department provides on the transportation for slaughter of spent hens; and if it is permissible for injured hens with broken limbs to be transported before slaughter;

(2) whether consignments of hens transported from the United Kingdom to other member states within the European Community require a veterinary check before transit; and whether they must be free from serious injury for such a journey to be permissible;

(3) what is her Department's policy on the transportation of spent hens via ferry to Holland for slaughter; and if she will make a statement;

(4) what guidelines are given by her Department to battery egg producers on how to dispose of spent hens which have sustained serious injury during their productive life.

Mr. Soames: Harmonised EC animal health rules governing the intra-Community trade in poultry require, inter alia, that consignments be examined for clinical signs or suspicions of disease shortly before export by an official veterinarian. In addition, the Welfare of Animals during Transport Order 1992 makes it an offence to cause or permit animals—including poultry—to be transported in a way which causes or is likely to cause injury or unnecessary suffering. The order, which implements European Community directive requirements, also makes it unlawful to transport diseased, ill or injured poultry and imposes a limit of 12 hours on the period which poultry may be transported without being fed and watered. Further provisions set standards for the carriage of poultry, including transport in road vehicles on board ship.

The joint industry welfare guide to the handling of spent hens—published by the National Farmers Union and the British Poultry Meat Federation—recommends that visibly unfit or injured birds must not be loaded but should be slaughtered on the farm as quickly and humanely as possible. The Ministry's code of recommendations for the welfare of domestic fowls—applicable to all on-farm, egg-laying hens—states that ailing birds and birds suffering from injury such as open wounds or fractures, or from prolapse of the vent should be segregated and treated or, if necessary, be humanely killed without delay. The law requires that any bird arriving at the slaughterhouse which is found to be suffering must be slaughtered immediately.

Food Prices

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the average price to the consumer of (a) a pint of milk, (b) a 2lb loaf of bread and (c) a pint of beer in 1970, 1980 and each year since 1990.

Mr. Jack: The annual averages of the prices used for calculating the retail prices index are given in the table.

	Annual average price (£)
Bread—800g white sliced loaf
1990	0·50
1991	0·53
1992	0·54
Milk—1 pint pasteurised
1990	0·31
1991	0·32
1992	0·34
Beer—1 pint draught bitter
1990	1·09
1991	1·24
1992	1·31

Botswana (Beef)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what will be the consequences for beef prices in Botswana of the proposed agreement at the general agreement on tariffs and trade.

Mr. Jack: The proposed GATT agreement includes a commitment to reduce both the volume of and expenditure on subsidised exports of beef. This should help to produce a firming of prices for beef on world markets, which would benefit Botswana.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment she has made of the benefits the Botswana beef industry gains from Lomé IV and of how this will be affected by the present GATT talks.

Mr. Jack: Under the terms of protocol seven of Lomé IV on beef and veal, Botswana benefits from a 90 per cent. reduction in the variable levy on beef and veal for an annual quantity of 18,916 tonnes of boneless meat. This would not be affected by the proposals in the draft Uruguay round agreement on agriculture.

Self-Sufficiency

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the level of United Kingdom self-sufficiency in all agricultural products in 1979, 1985 and each year since 1990.

Mr. Jack: I refer my hon. Friend to the tables in section 5 of the publication "Agriculture in the United Kingdom, 1992" copies of which have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Wool Sales (Penalties)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals she has to bring forward legislation to increase the maximum penalty which the British Wool Marketing Board may impose on members who sell wool to independent merchants; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Any amendment to the British wool marketing scheme would be initiated by the board and then, following consultation with producers, submitted to Ministers for consideration. None on this matter has been received.

Northmoor

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total cost of the proposal to replace the diesel pumps at Northmoor pumping station with electric pumps; what is the expected amount of grant that would be paid by the Ministry towards the replacement of the pumps; and what proportion of residual costs after grant aid would fall upon the Somerset county council as a levy-paying authority to the National Rivers Authority and Northmoor district drainage board.

Mr. Jack: The estimated cost of the proposed electric pumps at Northmoor pumping station in the Somerset levels is £415,334 at current prices. If approved, MAFF grant aid would be available at 45 per cent. of eligible costs, with the remainder funded by the National Rivers Authority (NRA) from levies on Somerset county council. The NRA proposals do not envisage any contribution from Northmoor internal drainage board.

Slaughter of Animals

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps Her Majesty's Government will now take to ensure that EC colleagues adopt the proposed EC directive on the welfare of animals at the time of slaughter or killing.

Mr. Soames: We initiated discussion on this proposal during the United Kingdom presidency. We have been at the forefront of member states seeking agreement on it. We shall continue to press for adoption during the Belgian presidency.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions have been held with EC colleagues on imposing an eight-hour limit on slaughter journeys for live farm animals.

Mr. Soames: On 1 January a new directive came into operation setting Community standards for the welfare of all animals during transport. We have been pressing the Commission strongly to submit proposals for the additional rules which are needed on key issues such as maximum journey times for certain types of animal.

I am pleased to say that the Commission announced on 13 July that the proposals were now ready and would be submitted to the Council. We hope that the negotiations in the Council will start shortly. The United Kingdom will be pressing for Community rules which reflect the high standards which we are applying in this country.

Surplus Food

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements will be made in the United Kingdom for 1993-94 under the EC surplus food scheme.

Mr. Jack: The United Kingdom's full share of EC funding 1993-94 for the Community's surplus food scheme will be used for the distribution of beef. In previous years, butter has also been distributed but successful reductions of intervention stocks has meant that butter cannot now be made available under the scheme.

Some 6,200 tonnes of beef are being released from intervention stocks to be canned for allocation to designated organisations. Further quantities of beef may be made available early next year.

In addition to asking existing designated organisations to confirm that they still wish to participate in the scheme during 1993-94, agriculture Departments will also be inviting new applications from appropriate charitable and other non-profit-making organisations who wish to be designated.

Fishing Vessels (Prosecutions)

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the names, the port of registry and the length or tonnage of British registered fishing vessels that have been successfully prosecuted under the Sea Fish Conservation Act 1967, listing the particular offence they were found guilty of and the penalty imposed.

Mr. Jack: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Fishing Vessels (Licences)

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if she will make it her policy to revoke fishing licences on British-registered vessels if sufficient evidence is presented of extensive breaches of regulations from investigations carried out in other states;

(2) how many fishing vessels on the British register have had their licences revoked because of breaches of regulations which resulted in successful prosecutions in the United Kingdom;

(3) in what circumstances fishing vessel licences are revoked for breaches of regulations following successful prosecution in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 23 July 1993]: Powers to revoke or suspend fishing licences following breaches of licence conditions are set out in section 4(9)(b) of the Sea Fish (Conservation) Act 1967, as amended, but have not yet been exercised.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) when she will be raising with the European Commission and the Spanish Government the subject of undersize fish caught in the British quota and landed in Spanish ports;

(2) what action she intends to take to protect and conserve undersize fish in British waters from British registered vessels that land their catch in Spanish ports.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 23 July 1993]: Any vessel retaining on board or landing undersize fish is breaching the rules of the common fisheries policy. I am raising this matter with the EC Fisheries Commissioner, Mr. Y. Paleokrassas and will be sending him a copy of the video tape of the recent "Cook Report" programme highlighting the problem of illegal fishing activity.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the names of current British-flagged fishing vessels which were formerly Spanish registered or owned by Spanish individuals or companies prior to their British registry; and when they were entered on the British register, their port of registration and their tonnage, length and horsepower.

Mr. Steven Norris: I am sending relevant extracts from the register of fishing vessels to the hon. Member and will place copies in the Library.

Depleted Uranium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 16 July, Official Report, column 709, what was the source of data on pyrophoric qualities of depleted uranium to which he refers; and if he will arrange for copies of the relevant information to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Aitken: The data from United States sources referred to in my answer of 16 July, Official Report, column 709, is classified. However, the office of the United States Assistant Secretary of Defence (Public Affairs) recently issued an unclassified fact sheet on "Health effects of depleted uranium" which was placed in the Library in response to a question from the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) of 29 June, Official Report, column 491.

Aldermaston

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last visited the atomic weapons establishment at Aldermaston; what was the purpose of his visit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence last visited AWE Aldermaston in June. The purpose of his visit was a briefing on the role and work of AWE.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the fire which occurred in a glove box in the A area of AWE Aldermaston on 15 June.

Mr. Aitken: There was no such incident on 15 June 1993.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by year for the last five years, the cost of running the Aldermaston atomic weapons establishment.

Mr. Aitken: The costs of the defence nuclear programme, including the costs of AWE, are classified, in accordance with the practice of successive Governments.

Hunting

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what circumstances stewards employed by hunts are allowed on to Ministry of Defence land where the hunt that employs them has a licence to hunt on Ministry of Defence land.

Mr. Hanley: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the total receipts in 1991-92 from licences for hunting on Ministry of Defence land, from all hunts that held a licence.

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that my right hon. Friend the Member for Epsom and Ewell (Mr. Hamilton) gave him on 29 March at column 11.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements exist for beagle hunts to hunt or have access to Ministry of Defence land other than those licensed to do so.

Mr. Hanley: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many licences to hunt on Ministry of Defence land are not subject to an annual fee.

Mr. Hanley: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Shooting Clubs

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many licences his Department issued to shooting clubs allowing them to shoot birds and mammals on Ministry of Defence land in (a) 1991, (b) 1992 and (c) 1993 to date.

Mr. Hanley: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Northumberland National Park

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to intensify or increase infantry training at Otterburn in the Northumberland national park; and what plans he has to acquire additional land for military training in the national park.

Mr. Hanley: The concentration of infantry recruit training at Catterick will mean an increase in man training days at Otterburn training area. Some additional land may be required. This will be subject to the outcome of an independent environmental impact assessment study and further discussions with the National Park Authority.

Land Purchases

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much land in the United Kingdom his Department purchased over each of the past five years.

Mr. Hanley: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Married Quarters

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of providing security for empty Ministry of Defence married quarters over the past year.

Mr. Hanley: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 16 July, Official Reply, column 723. The cost of caretaking covers security.

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards residence by widows of late service personnel with children in Ministry of Defence married quarters not required for use.

Mr. Hanley: All widows of late service personnel are allowed to remain in a married quarter for up to six months after the death of their husband. Procedures vary slightly within individual services, but all widows continue to pay the standard accommodation charge during this period. Accommodation may sometimes be available in surplus married quarters and widows may be allowed to remain there beyond the six-month period until they have found alternative accommodation, so long as there are no pressing service requirements for the property.

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many discount sales of Ministry of Defence married quarters have been made in the past year to service personnel leaving the forces.

Mr. Hanley: Further to the answer I gave my hon. Friend on 20 July 1993, Official Report, column 165, during 1992-93, 346 sales were completed through the services discount scheme.

Data Processing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the numbers of staff by grade that are employed in his Department and agencies in the automatic data processing functional specialism.

Mr. Aitken: Numbers of staff by grade that are employed in the automatic data processing functional specialism as at 22 July 1993 are as follows:

	Number
Executive officer	1,254
Higher executive officer	711
Senior executive officer	229

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Aitken: Further to the reply given to my hon. Friend on 15 July 1992, Official Report, column 817, I can inform him that our new suppliers service has given marketing advice to about 2,000 companies over the past 12 months. Also, in November 1992 the MOD reissued its advisory booklet on selling to the MOD. The publication is intended to be of particular value to small companies.

Details of payments made to small firms during 1992-93 are not yet available, but during 1991-92, some 6,300 small companies secured contracts valued at approximately £1·16 billion. A significant number of these orders went to companies with less than 50 employees. In the same period Ministry of Defence establishments awarded 276,000 local purchase orders valued at about £222 million, a large number of which went to small firms.

Land Sales

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by Welsh local authority the extent of the land held by his Department indicating in each area the amount of land to be sold by the end of 1993.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is provided by county. A breakdown by local authority could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

(2) how many beds were provided at (a) Royal Navy hospital Stonehouse, (b) RAF hospital Ely and (c) RAF hospital Halton in each of the last three years for which figures are available;

(3) what discussions his Department has had with local health authorities regarding the closure of military hospitals.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested in respect of patients treated and bed numbers is as follows:

Mine Hunters

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 11 May, Official Report, column 458, to the hon. Member for Colchester, South and Maldon (Mr. Whittingdale) what progress he is making in issuing invitations to tender for a further batch of Sandown class mine hunters before the House rises for the summer recess.

Mr. Aitken: We expect to make an announcement on the next batch of single role minehunters shortly, but I regret this will not be before the House rises.

Anthrax Vaccine

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department has facilities for the manufacture or storage of anthrax vaccine.

Mr. Hanley: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment under its framework document and I have asked the chief executive to reply.

Letter from Mr. G. Pearson to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 26 July 1993:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him if his Department has facilities for the manufacture or storage of anthrax vaccine (Question 3, Order Paper 20 July 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out research to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. As part of this work research is carried out into medical countermeasures including vaccines against the chemical and biological warfare agents that might be used against the UK Armed Forces.

3. There are no facilities for the manufacture of anthrax vaccine in the Ministry of Defence. However, storage facilities for a wide range of medical products used by the Armed Forces including vaccines are available in the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the expenditure on the purchase of anthrax vaccine in each of the last three financial years.

Mr. Hanley: Details relating to all vaccines giving protection against biological warfare agents are classified.

Military Training Overseas

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now make it his practice to give details of the cost of the military training provided by Her Majesty's Government to individual overseas countries.

Mr. Hanley: There are no plans to change the current practice of not divulging such information as it is a confidential matter between the Governments concerned.

Near-collision (Irish Sea)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his American counterpart concerning the near-collision which occurred between a United States nuclear submarine and the MFV Lupina C in the Irish sea on 16 September 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has had no such discussions. Officials have, however, discussed the incident with the United States authorities and the latter have now completed an investigation into the incident and have recently passed a copy of their report to us. A press statement has also been issued by the United States authorities. The marine accident investigation branch is now conducting an investigation of the incident.

Arms Sales

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on British arms sales to Israel.

Mr. Aitken: The sale of defence equipment to Israel has been restricted since 1982 in direct response to Israel's invasion of southern Lebanon.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on British arms sales to the middle east.

Mr. Aitken: It is our policy to support the sale of British defence equipment overseas wherever this is compatible with our political, strategic and security interests, and does not conflict with our international obligations.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Finchley of 28 June, Official Report, column 345, on United Kingdom arms sales in 1992, if he will place similar information for each year from 1979 in the Library.

Mr. Aitken: The 1992 United Nations register return was the first such return made. Information relating to earlier defence exports is contained in "UK Defence Statistics". A copy of the 1993 edition has recently been placed in the Library of the House.

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the Government's policy on arms sales to countries in the Indian sub-continent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: All exports of arms require an export licence. Each application is carefully considered on a case by case basis taking into account a range of factors including international and national security and regional stability. In particular, no arms are allowed to be exported when they are judged likely to be used for internal repression or terrorist activities. This system of control applies to all destinations, including the countries of the Indian sub-continent.

Army (Training Needs)

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 28 June, Official Report, columns 377-78, on training land, whether he intends to publish the results of the work his Department is conducting in the assessment of the Army's training needs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: My Department's proposals for the future organisation of the Army's individual training organisation were set out in the answer my right hon. Friend the Member for Epsom and Ewell (Mr. Hamilton) gave my hon. Friend the Member for Wimbledon (Dr. Goodson-Wickes) on 16 December 1992 at columns 335-36 and the answer that I gave my hon. Friend the Member for South Dorset (Mr. Bruce) on 22 July at column 351-52. These, together with the Army's requirements for unit and formation training, will form the basis of the Army's training needs. Any requirement for training land to meet that requirement will be subject to rigorous scrutiny before any final decisions are taken.

I am placing in the Library of the House a copy of a summary of the Army's collective training strategy.

Nimrod

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the RAF bases at which Nimrod aircraft are still based; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Royal Air Force Nimrod aircraft are based at RAF Kinloss and RAF Wyton.

Overseas Land

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the land overseas which is owned by the Government, which has a defence role, giving the number of hectares; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The Ministry of Defence owns 15 married quarters in the United States of America, five in north-west Europe, 17 in Gibraltar and two in the Bahamas for the use of serving personnel. In the Falkland Islands the Ministry of Defence owns eight aerial/radar sites. All other facilities overseas are either leased or made available under various intergovernmental agreements.

RAF St. Mawgan

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to develop a listening device out to sea from the joint maritime communications centre at RAF St. Mawgan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave the hon. Member on 28 June at column 379.

Trident

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what cost savings he estimates would be made in each of the next four years if one Trident was mothballed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The Government remain committed to a four boat Trident force. Estimates of the possible savings which could accrue from mothballing any of the Vanguard class submarines are not, therefore, available.

RAF Training Ranges

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many practice bombs have been dropped at the Wiley Sike range in each year since 1977; and if he will list the permitted types of weaponry at the Wiley Sike range;

(2) if he will list the locations of each of the remote threat emitter sites at RAF Spadeadam, the date on which each became operational and the number of days on which each has been active in each year since becoming operational;

(3) if he will list the amounts spent on capital investment in buildings and equipment at RAF Spadeadam in each year since 1977; and if he will specify what amounts were paid from (a) United Kingdom funds, (b) United States air force funds and (c) NATO funds;

(4) within what radius of RAF Spadeadam the dropping of chaff is permitted; and what are the restrictions on the amount of chaff dropped by each aircraft;

(5) how many electronic training runs were carried out by aircraft at RAF Spadeadam in each year since 1977;

(6) what communications he has received from telecommunications operators and customers concerning interference caused by electronic emissions from RAF Spadeadam;

(7) how many Skyguard radars are in service at RAF Spadeadam; what are the roles of each; and if he will specify the circumstances in which these radars are deployed beyond the boundaries of the RAF Spadeadam range;

(8) if he will list the radio frequency ranges on which RAF Spadeadam is permitted to transmit; what changes have taken place in these permitted ranges since 1985; and what plans he has for further changes;

(9) if he will list the number of occasions on which RAF Spadeadam has been activated later than 6 pm in each year since 1988.

Mr. Hanley: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the purchase of equipment to provide simulation of non-Soviet threats at RAF Spadeadam.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has no such plans at present.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for alterations to the boundaries of the tactical training areas.

Mr. Hanley: There are no plans to alter the boundaries of the tactical training areas used for operational low flying. From October however, we intend to dispense with the administrative separation of the Borders tactical training area into east and west sections. This will simplify the management of the low-flying system and will mean that statistics on movements in the Borders tactical training area will be directly comparable with those for the northern Scotland and central Wales tactical training areas. At present the division of the Borders area can lead to a single sortie generating more than one movement in central records.

Airwork Ltd.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many MOD contracts Airwork Ltd. currently has; what is their approximate total value; and when the last contract currently held by Airwork Ltd. was last awarded.

Mr. Aitken: Further to my answer to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 27 April 1993 at column 394, the position at the end of June was that Airwork Ltd. held 51 contracts from my Department. The original value of these was just over £95 million, but the value of work still to be carried out was approximately £28·3 million. The most recent of these contracts was placed on 28 April.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which companies tendered for the 134 F3 Tornado 25 fatigue index modification contract awarded to Airwork Ltd. in September 1992.

Mr. Aitken: Four companies submitted tenders for the 25 FI modification programme:

Airwork Ltd.
Lovaux Ltd.
BAe Warton
BAe Hamble

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department's assurance periodic surveillance reports on the quality of performance by Airwork Ltd. on the F3 Tornado modification contract by RAF St. Athan from September 1992 to March 1993 identified the problems leading to the cancellation of the contract on 25 May.

Mr. Aitken: In view of our pending claim, it would be inappropriate for me to comment on the contents of the surveillance reports by the MOD quality assurance staff.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the estimated turn-round time per aircraft for the modification programme for RAF F3 Tornados to be carried out by Airwork Ltd. pursuant to its September 1992 contract; and in what way its quality assurance procedures and surveillance work differed from those agreed with British Aerospace on the preceding contract.

Mr. Aitken: The Airwork contract required a turnround time of 45 working days for each aircraft, though 60 days were allowed for the first aircraft off each production line. The same quality assurance procedures applied to both the Airwork and BAe contracts for Tornado F3 fatigue modifications.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the flight safety risk of the damage done by Airwork Ltd. in the course of the F3 Tornado modification programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken:: The damage, if unrepaired, would have reduced the aircraft's safe fatigue life and could have posed a flight safety risk. The detailed investigation now underway will assess the extent to which the damage to each aircraft affects its structural integrity and determine the most appropriate repair scheme.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations he has had with Deutsche Aerospace in relation to inspection of fasteners and fastener holes with respect to the manufacturer's guarantee on the centre fuselage section of F3 Tornados damaged by Airwork Ltd. in the course of the modification programme.

Mr. Aitken: The investigation by the aircraft design authorities into the precise extent of the damage to each aircraft is not yet complete and we have still to receive their assessment.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date and at which RAF station the structural damage to F3 Tornados was first discovered, which led to the cancellation of the Airwork modification contract.

Mr. Aitken: Damage to one aircraft was discovered on 29 March at RAF St. Athan where Airwork was carrying out the embodiment of the modifications. However, this was not sufficiently serious to justify termination of the contract. More serious damage was discovered subsequently.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date Airwork secured AQAP4 registration; when that registration was last reviewed and checked; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Airwork Ltd. has held AQAP1 registration (a higher level which embraces AQAP4) for a number of years. The registration was last reviewed in August 1992, when the company was reassessed against the new ISO 9001 requirement and certificated for a further three years.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Airwork remains on the defence contractors list; and when its ownership and financial standing and level of performance indemnity assurance was last reviewed.

Mr. Aitken: Airwork Ltd. remains on the defence contractors list, a position which is subject to regular review. In making decisions on the award of contracts, we take account of contractors' past performance.

The ownership and financial standing of Airwork were last reviewed by my officials on 17 May. My Department holds a performance guarantee from Airwork Ltd's holding company, supported by guarantees from the holding company's shareholders; these are not limited in value and are still current.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the average cost of the 25 fatigue index modification programme carried out on the F3 Tornado RAF aircraft at RAF St. Athan by British Aerospace; what the quality assurance procedures and surveillance were; and what the average turn-round times per aircraft.

Mr. Aitken: Contract prices are commercially confidential. The normal MOD quality assurance arrangements applied to both the BAe and Airwork contracts. Under these a contractor with the appropriate QA registration is responsible for the quality of his work in accordance with the contractual quality plan; there is some limited MOD QA surveillance. The average turnround time on the BAe contract was 63 days. However, the two contracts called for different turnround times and hence different shift and resource patterns.

Depleted Uranium

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those air-to-ground weapons ranges in the United Kingdom at which the practice firing of depleted uranium shells by United States Air Force aircraft has been permitted.

Mr. Aitken: None.

RAF Institute of Aviation Medicine

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the titles and names of contractors for all externally commissioned research work on behalf of the Royal Air Force Institute of Aviation Medicine since 1985.

Mr. Hanley: The Royal Air Force Institute of Aviation Medicine has commissioned only one such contract since 1985. This contract, placed with a British university, was ended in 1991. It is not the practice of my Department to release the names of contractors undertaking work on its behalf.

NATO Standardisation

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the NATO standardisation agreement 3531 was implemented in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hanley: NATO standardisation agreement 3531 was implemented in the United Kingdom in April 1992.

Low Flying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the current requirements for operational low flying by Royal Navy Sea Harrier aircraft.

Mr. Hanley: The Sea Harrier is required to conduct low level operational flying as part of its air to ground role. The aircrew have to train regularly at low level over land to maintain this expertise.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give a breakdown, for each type of Royal Navy aircraft, of the number of (a) hours and (b) sorties flown at low level in each year since 1979.

Mr. Hanley: Records are not held centrally in the form requested, so the information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Harrier

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated total cost of the rectification programme for the Harrier GR5/GR7 fleet following the series of electrical faults during 1991.

Mr. Aitken: The estimated total cost to my Department is £8·4 million.

Researchers (Attacks)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 20 July, Official Report, column 174, if he will list the incidents reported to his Department in which academic researchers assigned to Ministry of Defence contracts have been physically attacked as a result of their work.

Mr. Aitken: I will write to the hon. Member on the specific point raised in his question. In the meantime, I can tell him that at a recent meeting with my officials the research councils strongly endorsed my Department's policy that universities should decide whether or not to disclose their receipt of funds from the Ministry of Defence for research contracts.

Uranium Enrichment

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes have been made in arrangements for the enrichment of uranium for defence purposes since the announcement by his predecessor of 23 June 1982, Official Report, columns 128-29, following the closure of enrichment plants in the United States of America.

Mr. Aitken: There have been no changes in the arrangements for the enrichment of uranium for defence purposes announced by the then Defence Secretary in 1982.

Porton Down (Animal Experiments)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library the papers which have been published since 1984 on the experiments that have taken place on animals at Porton Down.

Mr. Hanley: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment under its framework document and I have asked the chief executive to reply.

Letter from Mr. G. Pearson to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 26 July 1993:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him if he will place in the Library the papers which have been published since 1984 on the experiments that have taken place on animals at Porton Down (Question 40, Order Paper 23 July 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. Although as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment I am keen to provide as much information as possible on the work of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, I have to do so with due regard to the security and safety of the staff at the Establishment. I regret that the activities of animal rights activists, who placed a bomb under the car of a member of my staff from which she was lucky to escape with her life, necessitate that I should not provide this particular kind of information relating to animal experiments. I therefore regret that I cannot be more helpful on this occasion.

Army Air Corps Aircraft

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give a breakdown for each type of Army Air Corps aircraft, of the number of (a) hours and (b) sorties flown at low level in each year since 1979.

Mr. Hanley: Army records, which are kept for a period of three years, show only the flights booked at low level rather than the actual number of flights. These are manual records and the information requested for the past three years could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Tritium

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes have been made in arrangements for procurement of tritium for defence purposes in the last 10 years.

Mr. Aitken: There have been no changes in the arrangements for procuring tritium for defence purposes in the last 10 years.

Refits

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether Swan Hunter can compete for future Royal Navy refits.

Mr. Aitken: Swan Hunter in Receivership will be eligible to compete for unallocated RN refits subject to the usual requirements in respect of financial status, facilities, resources and qualifications.

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will now arrange for the refit of a destroyer or frigate to be put out to competitive tender.

Mr. Aitken: We plan to invite tenders for the refit of HMS Birmingham, a type 42 destroyer, in the near future.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the public bodies for which he is responsible hold meetings in public; and if he will list them.

Mr. Hanley: I will write to the hon. Member.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Inquests

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what action will be taken to ensure that the operation of the inquest system is expedited.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Under the present inquest procedures in Northern Ireland, decisions about the commencement, adjournment and timing of a particular inquest are matters largely for the coroner tasked with responsibility for the conduct of the inquest. The Government are satisfied that those arrangements are right in principle, because the coroner is in the best position to judge these matters based on his knowledge of all the circumstances of the case. In a small minority of cases, there is a degree of unavoidable delay due to a range of factors, such as the complexity of the circumstances giving rise to the death; the necessary time taken by the authorities fully to investigate the circumstances of the death, to make proper decisions about criminal prosecutions, and to bring appropriate cases to trial; and legal challenges to coroners' decisions made in the higher courts by the next-of-kin of the deceased or other interested parties. The Government are conscious, as are the coroners and all those involved in the inquest system, of the need to ensure that delays in the holding of inquests are kept to a minimum. The Government believe, nevertheless, that the present arrangements generally work well in practice and do not propose any action at this time.

Computer Consultancies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list all the computer consultancies employed by his Department, since November 1991, the tasks for which they were engaged, and the total cost to his Department.

Mr John M. Taylor: Between 1 November 1991 and 30 June 1993, the Lord Chancellor's Department has awarded contracts for information technology services to 38 companies. The total cost of these contracts is £2,182,473.

Information about the companies to whom contracts were awarded is commercial in confidence and may not be revealed.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list all the computer consultancies employed by the Land Registry, since November 1991, the tasks for which they were engaged, and the total cost to his Department.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The hon. Member's question concerns a specific matter on which the chief executive of Her Majesty's Land Registry is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked the chief executive to reply direct.

Letter from John Manthorpe to Mr. John McAllion, dated 26 July 1993:

Parliamentary question No. 93/480 computer consultancies employed by HM Land Registry

In reply to your question, I can confirm that no computer consultancies have been employed by HM Land Registry since November 1991.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will be placed in the House library.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the numbers of staff by grade that are employed in his Department in the automatic data processing functional specialism.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The following numbers of staff are employed on work which qualifies them to receive the automatic data processing allowance.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the numbers of staff by grade that are employed in the Land Registry in the automatic data processing functional specialism.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Government continue to help small businesses, through improvements to the business climate, through deregulation and through specific programmes of support and assistance.

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list all those services or functions contracted out in his Department, since November 1991, in which the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1988 were not applied.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Whether or not TUPE applies in any particular case will depend on the nature of the work awarded and the contractor's own proposals for carrying out this work. Since November 1991, the Lord Chancellor's Department has completed market tests for the professional services required to manage its accommodation and development of new court buildings, and the internal audit function. None of these services or functions has attracted TUPE. A list of services and functions contracted out outside the Department's market testing programme is not readily available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list all those services or functions contracted out in the Land Registry, since November 1991, in which the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1988 were not applied.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The hon. Member's question concerns a specific matter on which the chief executive of Her Majesty's Land Registry is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked the chief executive to reply direct.

Letter from John Manthorpe to Mr. John McAllion, dated 26 July 1993:

As Chief Executive it is my responsibility to answer questions on operational matters concerning HM Land Registry. Consequently, the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question to him concerning contracted out services in HM Land Registry.

Since November 1991, there have been no services or functions carried out by Land Registry staff which have been contracted out. Market Testing exercises are currently being carried out in which the TUPE regulations may apply once the successful bid has been identified.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will be placed in the House Library.

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what conclusions he has reached about the amalgamation of magistrates' courts committees outside Greater London.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The White Paper "A New Framework for Local Justice", published in February 1992, announced our intention of reducing the number of magistrates' courts committee areas from the present 105 to 50 to 60 in due course. In the light of extensive consultation with magistrates' courts committees and others in the magistrates' courts service, the Lord Chancellor has concluded that the following magistrates' courts committees outside Greater London should be amalgamated:

Manchester City, Tameside, Oldham and Stockport;
Trafford, Salford, Wigan, Bury, Rochdale and Bolton;
Knowsley, Liverpool, St. Helens, Sefton and Wirral;
Birmingham, Coventry and Solihull;
Dudley, Sandwell, Walsall and Wolverhampton;
Newcastle Upon Tyne, North Tyneside and Northumberland;
Gateshead, South Tyneside and Sunderland;
Leeds and Wakefield;
Bradford, Calderdale and Kirklees:
Sheffield, Barnsley, Doncaster and Rotherham;
Avon and Somerset;
Berkshire, Buckinghamshire and Oxfordshire;
Hereford and Worcester and Shropshire;
Hampshire and the Isle of Wight;
Devon and Cornwall;
Warwickshire and Staffordshire.

In Wales, the new magistrates' courts committee areas will cover the following unitary authority areas:

Anglesey, Caernarfonshire and Merionethshire, Aberconwy and Colwyn, Denbighshire, Flintshire and Wrexham;
Powys, Pembrokeshire, Cardiganshire and Carmarthenshire;
Swansea, West Glamorgan and Bridgend;
Vale of Glamorgan, Glamorgan Valleys and Cardiff;
Heads of the Valleys, Caerphilly, Torfaen, Newport and Monmouthshire.

These amalgamations can be brought into effect only by an order made by the Lord Chancellor. At present, such an order can be made only on the application of the local magistrates. Legislation will be introduced at the earliest opportunity to enable the Lord Chancellor to make such an order. Before making any order amalgamating magistrates' courts committee areas, the Lord Chancellor will take into account the views of those affected. No order will be made without an opportunity for those locally to make representations. The Lord Chancellor will therefore require local consultation to have taken place, and views reported to him, when considering whether an order should be made.

All other committee areas outside London should remain organised as they are at present. The Lord Chancellor will announce his decisions about the future organisation of the magistrates' courts service in London separately.

Legal Aid

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the cost of legal aid for immigration cases in each of the last five years.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The only immigration cases for which civil legal aid is available are judicial review proceedings. It is not possible to provide separate expenditure figures for judicial review proceedings involving immigration cases. Green form advice is, however, available for immigration and nationality matters and gross expenditure in each of the last five years on those matters was as follows:

	£000's
1988-89	782
1989-90	1,682
1990-91	2,653
1991-92	5,018
1992-93	7,248

Iraq (Sanctions)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what action has been taken as a result of a meeting on 22 June, arranged by him, between the Under-Secretary at the Foreign Office, Sir Michael Burton, and the hon. Member for Linlithgow, on the effect of sanctions on the health, infant mortality and economy of Iraq.

The Prime Minister: Since the meeting referred to, £1 million has been transferred through the UN escrow account for purchasing part of the crop grown in northern Iraq to help feed the local population. We have also agreed to finance a programme of water and sanitation work in schools in the south. Emergency relief is to be provided to people fleeing repression in the south.

No. 10 Downing Street

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister what income was received from the use of No. 10 Downing street for non-official functions in the last three financial years.

The Prime Minister: The costs of catering staff and other expenses are met directly by the organisers of such events. No charge is made for the use of 10 Downing street.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the non-official or party receptions or functions at 10 Downing street during the coming 12 months for which permission has been given.

The Prime Minister: I am not prepared to give advance notice of functions at 10 Downing street, whether official or non-official.

Desert Storm Syndrome

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will discuss Desert Storm Syndrome when he meets the French President on 26 July.

The Prime Minister: No. The subject was not discussed.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the witnesses who have appeared to date before the Scott inquiry; what is the total cost incurred to date by Her Majesty's Government in providing documents, witnesses and support services for the Scott inquiry; and what allocation of resources has been made for future activities of the inquiry.

The Prime Minister: To date, the following have given oral evidence in open session to Lord Justice Scott's inquiry:

Ministers/former Ministers

P. W. M. Vereker Esq.
M. Higson Esq.
Sir David Miers

Non-Government
Sir Hal Miller
D. James Esq.

In addition, nine witnesses have given oral evidence in closed session.

The records of the Department of Trade and Industry show that the total amount charged by the inquiry to that Department for the provision of support services—permanent costs of most staff, equipment, and other general administrative costs—up to 23 July 1993 is £310,000. The cost to Government Departments of providing to the inquiry documents and witnesses requested is not held centrally and could be given only at disproportionate cost.

Specific allocation of resources for the future activities of the inquiry has not been made.

Thailand (Drug Smugglers)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he made to secure the release from gaol in Thailand of two women convicted of drug smuggling; what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government with regard to seeking the release of United Kingdom citizens detained abroad for drugs offences; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I shall write to the right hon. Member.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Open Government

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how his proposals in relation to access to personal information as described in the White Paper on open government differ from those proposed in the data protection directive—COM. (92) 422; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The White Paper on open government proposes a clear and effective free-standing right for people to have access to personal information held about them by a wide range of public authorities. It complements the right of access to computerised data provided by the Data Protection Act 1984. The subject of access provisions in the draft directive on data protection are only one part of an elaborate structure for the control of personal data, whether held on computer or otherwise, in all sectors.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many appointments to public bodies since April 1992 have been advertised; and if he will list them by Department.

Mr. Waldegrave: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list all the computer consultancies employed by his Department and agencies, since November 1991, the tasks for which they were engaged, and the total cost to his Department.

This figure does not include the cost of CCTA computer consultancies. The information requested is not held centrally within CCTA in the form requested and is available only at disproportionate cost.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government continue to help small businesses, through improvements to the business climate, through deregulation and through specific programmes of support and assistance. Work carried out by my Department over the last 12 months to assist small businesses includes:

publishing the science engineering and technology White Paper "Realising Our Potential". This paper sets out how Government will be giving increased priority to smaller firms within their programmes for encouraging industrial research and development; and will be seeking to involve companies of all sorts, including small businesses, in the new technology foresight programme; running two full-day conferences designed to inform businesses of the potential opportunities for competing for Government contracts under the market-testing programme. These were attended by representatives from over 400 companies, including many small businesses; encouraging Government Departments and agencies to assist business, including small firms, through citizens charter initiatives such as the VAT charter produced by Customs and Excise, and the Employer's charter produced by the Contributions Agency; helping the DTI's deregulation unit to frame a code of good practice for enforcement agencies in accordance with citizens charter principles. The code was published on 20 July; overseeing an efficiency scrutiny into the implementation and enforcement of EC law in the United Kingdom; the report of the scrutiny was also published on 20 July.

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list all those services or functions contracted out in his Department and Agencies, since November 1991, in which the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1988 were not applied.

Mr. David Davis: Whether or not TUPE applies in any particular case will depend on the nature of the work awarded and the contractors' own proposals for carrying out that work. The services and functions contracted out since November 1991 by the Office of Public Service and Science, including its agencies, and Her Majesty's Stationery Office and the Central Office of Information in which the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1988 did not apply are as follows:

Service/Function (and area)

Conference and Event Management (CCTA)
Data Preparation (Chessington Computer Centre)
Distribution of College 1993-94 Prospectus (Civil Service College) Elements of Payroll Development (Chessington Computer Centre
Reprographics Unit Basildon (HMSO)
Telephonist Service for Downing Street (OPSS)
Training (Chessington Computer Centre)
Typing Services at Publications Centre (HMSO)

Research Council Chair

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what consideration he is giving to having a research scientist as opposed to an industrialist as chairman of the one research council which will be concerned under his proposals with basic science.

Mr. Waldegrave: Although the new Particle Physics and Astronomy Research Council will not be exempt from a responsibility to consider its contribution to wealth creation, I would not wish to rule out the appointment of a suitably qualified research scientist as part-time non-executive chairman of the council.

Research Vessel Services

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much money was raised by Research Vessel Services (Barry) in commissioned research and charter income in each of the last three years; and what is the estimated income from this source in the 1993-94 financial year.

Mr. David Davis: Research Vessels Services does not itself carry out commissioned research. Charter receipts are as follows:

Year	Charter Receipts (£k)
1990-91	35
1991-92	0
1992-93	348
1993-94	91

Notes.
1. The 1992-93 figure is provisional, as the council's accounts for that year have not yet been audited.
2. The 1993-94 figure is an estimated one.

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to whom each of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Cabinet Office is responsible; whether the public bodies or their members in each case are subject to (a) surcharge, (b) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charters; and whether the chairpersons and members of the boards of each of these bodies are required to declare and interest.

Mr. David Davis [holding answer 23 July 1993]: The executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Office of Public Service and Science—which forms part of the Cabinet Office—are as follows:

Agricultural and Food Research Council
Economic and Social Research Council
Medical Research Council
Natural Emvironment Research Council
Science and Engineering Research Council

The research councils are responsible to my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

(a) Neither the councils nor their members are subject to surcharge;

(b) the councils are subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner;

(c) the councils are subject to scrutiny by the National Audit Office;

(d) the councils are not subject to open government provisions applying to local government—other than the Data Protection Act 1984—but they will come within the proposals contained within chapters 4, 5 and 6 of the open government White Paper (Command 2290);

(e) the councils publish performance indicators in their annual corporate plans;

(f) all public servants are subject to the citizens charter. The research councils are encouraged to adopt charter principles.

The Cabinet Office also sponsors the Chequers Trust, which is an independent trust.

(a) Neither the trust nor its members are subject to surcharge;

(b) the trust is not subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner;

(c) the trust is subject to scrutiny by the National Audit Office;
(d) the trust is not subject to statutory provisions for open government;
(e) the trust is not required to publish performance indicators;
(f) the trust operates on citizens charter principles.

Before any appointments are made to public bodies great care is taken to ensure that there is no conflict of interest.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total expenditure by all Departments on executive non-departmental public bodies for each year since 1970-71 in 1991-92 prices.

Mr. David Davis [holding answer 23 July 1993]: The following table gives details of the total Government expenditure in 1991-92 prices on executive non-departmental public bodies for the financial year 1978-79 and then each financial year since 1981-82 to 1991-92. Figures for the financial years 1970-71 to 1977-78 and 1979-80 to 1980-81 are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Executive non-departmental public bodies

	Total government expenditure (in 1991-92 prices) £ million

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many of the public bodies for which he is responsible hold meetings in public; and if he will list them.

Mr. Sproat: My Department sponsors 44 non-departmental public bodies and has policy responsibility for five public corporations. None of their board meetings is held in public. Some bodies, however, hold conferences, open days and other kinds of meetings from time to time on matters of general interest attended by members of the public.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage to whom each of the executive non-departmental public bodies is sponsored by the Department of National Heritage is responsible; whether the public bodies or their members in each case are subject to (a) surcharge, (b) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charters; and whether the chairpersons and members of the boards of each of these bodies are required to declare an interest.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 23 July 1993]: My Department's executive non-departmental public bodies —NDPBs—are listed in "Public Bodies 1992", to which should be added the Geffrye museum and the Horniman museum which became executive NDPBs during the course of 1992. The functions and responsibilities of each body are specified in its founding legislation or charter.

(a) There are no surcharging arrangements.

(b) Bodies subject to the jurisdiction of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration are listed in schedule 2 to the Parliamentary Commissioner Act 1967, as amended. This includes:

Arts Council of Great Britain
British Film Institute
British Library Board
Crafts Council
English Tourist Board
Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission (English Heritage)
Museums and Galleries Commission
Trustees of the National Heritage Memorial Fund
Registrar of Public Lending Right
Sports Council

(c) All of my Department's executive NDPBs are subject to scrutiny by the Comptroller and Auditor General with the exception of the national film development Fund.

(d) There are no statutory provisions on open government which apply to executive NDPBs.

(e) Performance indicators for my Department's executive NDPBs can be found in their annual reports and are summarised in the DNH annual report 1993, Cm 2211.

(f) The principles of the citizens charter apply to all the Department's executive NDPBs. All appointments to NDPBs are made in accordance with guidance provided by the Cabinet Office and the Treasury, which requires Ministers to satisfy themselves that there is no conflict of interest.

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list all those services or functions contracted out in his Department and Agencies, since November 1991, in which the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were not applied.

Mr. Sproat: Whether or not the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations apply in any particular case will depend on the nature of the work awarded and the contractors' own proposals for carrying out the work.

My Department has contracted out mailroom services, minor maintenance, office cleaning, reprographics, security, central typing and secretarial cover, and the provision of computer equipment and new associated services.

The Royal Parks Agency has contracted grounds maintenance and the provision of nursery services and the Historic Royal Parks Agency has contracted out manning of vehicle entrances, ticket checking and the security control room at the Tower of London.

Computer Consultancies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list all the computer consultancies employed by his Department and agencies, since November 1991, the tasks for which they were engaged, and the total cost to his Department.

Mr. Sproat: My Department has used the Government's centre for information systems, the CCTA, to advise on its computer requirements and future information systems strategy. It has also used Sema Group Ltd. to advise on transferring data from former parent Departments, and on various proposals for computer software. To date, the Department has spent £416,658 inclusive of VAT on computer consultancies.

The Royal Parks Agency has used KPMG to develop IT-based systems for financial monitoring, grounds maintenance monitoring and crime monitoring for the Royal Parks constabulary. It has also used Mr. Geoffrey Page, an individual consultant, to develop and commence implementation of an IT strategy. To date, it has spent £82,547 inclusive VAT on consultancies.

The Historic Royal Palaces Agency has used Ibex Systems Ltd. to develop the agency's financial system at a cost of £1,462 inclusive of VAT.

ITV Levy

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how he proposes to refund any overpayments of ITV levy.

Mr. Brooke: During the current financial year it will be necessary to make payments, via the Independent Television Commission, to independent television companies that, in the accounting period to 31 December 1992, made excess payments of levy into the Consolidated Fund. Parliamentary approval to this new service will be sought in a supplementary estimate for the Department of National Heritage home broadcasting vote—class XI vote 4. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £4·1 million will be met by repayable advances from the Contingencies Fund.

The levy came to an end on 31 December 1992 when it was replaced by the new arrangements for Channel 3 licences laid down in the Broadcasting Act 1990.

National Lottery

Mr. Coe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement about the benefits which may accrue to tourism as a result of the national lottery.

Mr. Sproat: I hope and expect that the tourism industry will benefit considerably as a result of funds arising from the national lottery. Fixed percentages of the net proceeds of the national lottery will be specifically allocated to areas which will enable British tourist attractions to be improved and enhanced. These allocations, amounting to hundreds of millions of pounds annually, and being additional to any spending otherwise available from the Government, will enable more capital provision to be made for both the natural and built heritage, for the arts, and for sport. For example, funds arising from the national lottery will enable further restoration, preservation and presentation of historic houses, historic sites, galleries and museums to be undertaken. They would also enable capital funding to be made available for visitor centres, designed to increase appropriate access to, and understanding of, our rich heritage. Again, extra funds would be available, for example, for improving existing theatres, or for building new theatres. Similarly, sports stadiums, and other sporting facilities, will be eligible to receive capital sums, which would not otherwise have been available, to improve existing sports facilities, or to add new ones.

Funds from the national lottery, however, will not be used to make direct grants to hotels or restaurants on the pattern of the old grants under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969.

In addition to funds arising from the national lottery which are allocated to the improvement of heritage, arts and sport, funds will also be allocated to the Millennium Commission, which is a new body established by the Bill charged with funding projects which celebrate the best of the old millennium and look forward to the new one. The commission will fund a number of visionary projects which, it is hoped, will attract interest worldwide, and thus add to tourist attraction for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the timetable for the process of tendering for the licence to run the national lottery.

Mr. Brooke: The National Lottery etc. Bill has now been read the Third time in another place and the only stage remaining is this House's consideration of Lords amendments. Its passage is therefore virtually completed, and I expect the National Lottery etc. Bill to receive Royal Assent in the autumn. The director general will be appointed and the invitation to tender will be issued shortly thereafter.

It is, therefore, intended that urgent work on the preparation of the invitation to tender, and on the selection process for the national lottery operator, should now be set in hand, in consultation with the regulatory adviser whom I expect to appoint shortly.

Parliamentary approval to this new service will be sought in a winter supplementary estimate for the office of the national lottery vote—class XI, vote 8—the main estimate for which was presented to Parliament on 17 June. Pending that approval and Royal Assent to the National Lottery etc. Bill, urgent expenditure estimated at £200,000 will be met by repayable advances from the Contingencies Fund. The fact that the National Lottery etc. Bill has completed virtually all of its parliamentary stages is a material factor in the decision to seek recourse to the Contingencies Fund.

Sports Grants

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will give a breakdown of grants given to individual sports by the Sports Council for the last available year.

Mr. Brooke: The Sports Council's grants to individual sports in 1992-93 were:

Items in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Warwick and Leamington (Sir D. Smith) of 21 July, Official Report, column 247, concerning the two paintings by Edward Vuillard accepted in lieu of inheritance tax, what were the relevant amounts of tax satisfied in respect of each of the paintings; and what conditions were attached, or wishes expressed, as to their destinations.

Mr. Sproat: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. I shall therefore write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Writers in Residence

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer of 14 July, Official Report, column 508, if he will state the country of origin of the writers from abroad to which grants were made by the Arts Council of Great Britain under its writers in residence scheme; and if he will indicate the place of residence of writers to whom other residency schemes have been made in the United Kingdom during the last five years.

Mr. Brooke: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. I shall therefore write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Tourism

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on his Department's review of regulations in the tourism industry.

Mr. Sproat: I told the House on 14 June that my Department proposed to carry out an urgent and detailed inquiry into the damaging effects of regulation on the tourism industry. This was because I was extremely concerned at reports of the expensive and time-wasting consequences of many regulations, and of their harmful effects on the competitiveness of our tourism industry.

I promised that I would report to the House before the summer recess on what the inquiry had achieved by that date. This I now do.

Following my announcement of an inquiry, I wrote asking for facts, examples, opinions, and proposals for change to the chairman of every regional tourist board, to scores of tourist-related trade associations, other relevant bodies, such as local authorities, and individuals such as hoteliers and restaurateurs. I also wrote personally to some 60 Members of Parliament with constituencies where tourism is a significant industry. I held meetings with the chairman of the British Tourist Authority, who is also chairman of the English tourist board, and with the chairmen of the Scottish and Wales tourist boards. I also met many delegations of those directly and personally involved in the tourism industry. I have met the chairman of the Retail and Tourism Task Force and the task force members representing the tourism industry, who have already done much work in this area as part of the deregulation initiative.

Officials of my Department have also had many detailed discussions with appropriate individuals and bodies.

The result of all this activity has been a deluge of valuable information from the industry on the subject. I am very grateful to the tourism industry for the swift, detailed and helpful responses I have received.

As a background to action that will follow from this inquiry, I want to make clear two matters: these regulations, or their interpretation, derive from several very different sources. These sources are the British Government, the European Community, local authorities, NDPBs, individual officials of local authorities and NDPBs, and rumour, ignorance, and misunderstanding; and regulations are, or are perceived to be, damaging for very different reasons. Here are 12 of many such reasons:

(i) Some regulations are damaging because they are inappropriately conceived from the start.

(ii) Some regulations were well-intentioned in theory but have proved ill conceived in practice.

(iii) Some regulations are interpreted in far too heavy-handed or officious a way.

(iv) Some regulations are applied in different ways in different parts of the country.

(v) Some regulations are applied in different ways in the same tourist outlet, such as a hotel or restaurant, by different officials at different times.

(vi) Some regulations are applied in a way where the punishment for non-compliance appears wholly disproportionate to the original breach, or alleged breach, of the regulation.

(vii) Some regulations are applied without a clear and straightforward right of appeal against an enforcement.

(viii) Some regulations are communicated in language so ill-written, or with guidance so complicated or so lengthy (or both), that they cannot be readily understood.

(ix) Some regulations require an implementation which is contradictory to another regulation.

(x) Some regulations are enforced strictly in the United Kingdom but are enforced laxly, or not at all, in other parts of the European Community, thus damaging the United Kingdom's competitiveness against tourism overseas.

(xi) Some regulations are damaging because they were promulgated originally with other industrial sectors primarily in mind, and without necessary thought being given to their effects on the tourism industry.

(xii) Some "regulations" are not regulations at all, but are misinterpretations of regulations by individual bodies or by individual officials of those bodies, or by firms and companies in the pursuit of contracts.

In addition to the damaging effect which individual regulations may have on individual businesses at individual times, there is a damaging effect brought about by the accumulation of these regulations—a damaging, cumulative effect which can be far greater than the sum of its parts.

I should also wish to emphasise most strongly that many regulations are wise and practical.

My Department's review has so far identified more than 80 pieces of legislation and regulations which affect the industry. It may be that we shall discover even more. I intend to investigate each of these individually and in detail in order to assess whether it imposes unnecessary burdens on tourism businesses.

Having identified the more than 80 pieces of legislation which I mention above, my inquiry has focused on the damage caused by burdensome regulations, and in particular the seven areas most often complained about. These are the subject of detailed and on-going study by my Department. These areas are:

(i) Food Safety and Hygiene;
(ii) Fire Safety;
(iii) Package Travel Regulations;
(iv) the Electricity at Work Regulations;
(v) Public Entertainment Licensing;
(vi) Tourism Signposting; and
(vii) Price Display Regulations.

Drawing on the information received from tourism businesses, and my Department's consequent research into the regulations concerned, a number of preliminary conclusions and recommendations have been arrived at in each case. I intend to discuss these conclusions and recommendations with ministerial colleagues.

I also intend to take up two further issues which have been raised with me where the interest of the tourism industry were not primarily considered:

First, I want to ensure that sufficient account is taken of tourism interests when air services agreements are being negotiated, and that benefits to regional airports can be maximised.

Second, there is growing concern, particularly, but not exclusively, in coastal resort towns, about the number of hotels which are being converted to hostels for benefit recipients, and about the unpleasant and harmful effects which this change of use is having on tourism, and the quality of life, in those areas.

My Department's review has also produced the preliminary recommendation that the Department should establish better communications with the grass roots of the tourism industry. My Department must also in future be even more closely linked into the Whitehall consultation process. This is in order to ensure that the implications for tourism of any regulatory proposal are recognised and fully taken into account.

The preliminary overall conclusion of my review is that the complex proliferation of regulations is unquestionably having a damaging effect on the tourism sector. This should now cease. I intend it to do so.

In addition to the detailed work which will now be undertaken on individual regulations, my Department is now advancing five guiding principles to be adopted whenever new regulations are being proposed:

(i) the specific nature and size of the problem or ill which the regulation is designed to curb must be identified and substantiated, clearly and in detail, before any regulation is proposed;

(ii) there should be both a compliance cost assessment, and risk assessment, for every regulation, to produce a cost-benefit analysis which should make specific reference to the impact on small businesses and on tourism;

(iii) the Department concerned should consider the new regulation in the context of the body of existing regulations, assess the cumulative effect of this body of regulation, and look at the case for excision, rationalisation or streamlining;

(iv) an automatic review should be built in, so that after a set time the Department concerned will assess whether the regulation is achieving its purpose, and is still necessary;

(v) consultation machinery between the Department concerned and the tourism industry, and between my Department and other Government Departments, will be improved; in particular, so that the views of the tourism industry are more fully taken into account.

I wish to emphasise strongly that this inquiry, and the specific actions that flow from it, are only the start of a continuing campaign to rid the tourism industry of unnecessary regulatory burdens. I shall continue to welcome advice and information from the tourism industry on this subject. During the summer recess, I intend to see representatives of every regional tourist board, in my office, and then to visit every regional tourist area in the field. I shall also be seeing more delegations from those involved directly in the tourism industry.

English Tourist Board

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the outcome of the English tourist board's strategic review.

Mr. Brooke: The English tourist board—ETB—has concluded a review of how best it might help the tourism industry make its full contribution to the economy by generating additional tourism business. The board retained consultants to conduct the review, and sent me a copy of their report earlier this month. The report contains new prioritised objectives for the board arising from the review, which are supported by the regional tourist boards —RTBs. These give top priority to the ETB's lead body function and action to improve the quality and value for money of the English tourism product. They give lower priority to marketing and programmes designed to encourage visits to a greater variety of destinations. The review also acknowledges the importance of the RTB network to the achievement of the ETB's objectives.

I look forward to receiving from the board a fully developed strategy to deliver such objectives in the most effective way within the resources allocated to it in the 1992 public expenditure survey. The board has also bid for additional resources by way of grant-in-aid from 1994-95 onwards. That bid will be considered in the process of the current survey.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

The Attorney-General: The Government continue to place a high priority on helping small businesses through improvements to the business climate, through deregulation and through specific programmes of support and assistance.

The departments for which I am responsible are the legal secretariat to the Law Officers, the Treasury Solicitor's department, the Crown Prosecution Service and the Serious Fraud Office. The services provided by the first two are largely internal to Government. The functions of the Crown Prosecution Service and the Serious Fraud Office relate purely to the criminal justice system.

As regards purchasing, all the departments have regard to the desirability of encouraging small businesses in line with the policy of the Government as a whole. However, no specific programmes of support and assistance operate in the departments for which I am responsible.

No transcript of the judgment of the Court of Appeal is yet available.

Court Proceedings

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Attorney-General when the Crown Prosecution Service expects to proceed with the case against the prisoner, details of which have been communicated to his office by the hon. Member for Stretford.

The Attorney-General: The case to which the hon. Member refers is listed for trial at Manchester Crown court on 1 November 1993. I will write in more detail to the hon. Member in due course.

EDUCATION

Complaints (Young People)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many complaints have been made under section 23 of the Education Reform Act 1988 concerning the specific actions of local education authorities in relation to the curriculum or religious worship; and what were the figures for each local education area in each year since 1989.

Mr. Robin Squire: The table shows the number of complaints received by local education authorities in academic years 1990-91 and 1991-92—the only years for which information is available. The figures include complaints received via the governing body of a school as well as those made direct to the local education authority. Only those authorities that have notified the Department of one or more complaints are included.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many complaints have been received from children or young people aged 18 years or under in relation to section 23 of the Education Reform Act 1988 according to each local education authority area for each year since 1989.

Mr. Robin Squire: The returns which local education authorities make to the Department for Education do not specify the age of the complainant.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many complaints have been received by his Department in relation to section 219 of the Education Reform Act 1988 in each year since 1989; and how many complaints related to (a) the conduct of local education authorities, (b) the conduct of governing bodies of maintained schools, (c) grant-maintained schools, (d) higher education corporations and (e) institutions of further and higher education maintained or assisted by local education authorities.

Mr. Robin Squire: This information will take some time to collate. I will write to the hon. Member as soon as it is available.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to amend circular 1/89 on local arrangements for the consideration of complaints to include references to complaints from pupils.

Mr. Robin Squire: No. Circular 1/89 already states that complaints may be made by "parents and others" and section 23 of the Education Reform Act places no restrictions on who may make a formal complaint about the curriculum or collective worship.

Nursery Education

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of children receive publicly funded nursery places in (a) Belgium, (b) Italy, (c) Spain, (d) Greece, (e) Germany and (f) the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: Information is not centrally available in the form requested. The table shows the latest available information on combined public and private participation rates in pre-compulsory schooling. Separate participation rates are not available. There are also some differences between countries in the distinction drawn between education and day care. If the United Kingdom figures are defined to include nursery schools, nursery classes, infant classes, pre-school play groups and group day care, the participation rates for both three to four and three to five-year-olds increase to over 90 per cent.

Student Unions

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the dates of each visit undertaken by members of his Department to student unions since April 1992; and what plans he has to visit student unions before the end of October.

Mr. Boswell: Officials have made visits to universities and colleges relating to student unions since April 1992 on 26 October and 8 and 9 December 1992; and on 26 January; 8, 12, 19, 22 and 25 February; 4, 5, 8, 11, 12 and 16 March; 22 April; and 7 and 14 May 1993. Other visits by Ministers and officials to universities and colleges also commonly include discussions with representatives of students.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many of the public bodies for which he is responsible hold meetings in public; and if he will list them.

Mr. Boswell: None.

Student Funding

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to alter the funding arrangements for British students undertaking first degrees at United Kingdom universities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend keeps the arrangements for the funding of students under periodic review. Any plans for changes, in this or any other field, would be announced at the appropriate time.

Public Spending

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what has been the total gross public spending on (a) grant-maintained schools and (b) city technology colleges for the years since 1988-89; and what is the projected expenditure for the years to 1995-96 at 1991-92 prices.

Mr. Forth: Spending to date on grant-maintained schools and city technology colleges has been as follows:

	1988-89 outturn £ million	1989-90 outturn £ million	1990-91 outturn £ million	1991-92 outturn £ million	1992-93 provisional £ million
Grant-maintained schools	0	18	69	183	485
City technology colleges	14	30	58	56	50

Total spending in future years on grant-maintained schools will depend on the number of schools becoming grant maintained, their size and location, and the balance between primary and secondary schools. However, on current trends a reasonable estimate would be about:

£ million (1991-92 prices)

	1993-94	1994-95	1995-96
Grant-maintained schools	1,100	2,300	4,000

Projected future spending on city technology colleges is as follows:

£ million (1991-92 prices)

	1993-94	1994-95	1995-96
City technology colleges	47	46	48

Note:

Figures for GM schools include annual maintenance grant, which is recovered from local authorities; special purpose grants; capital grant; cost of GM ballots; the Grant Maintained Schools Centre; the projected cost of the Funding Agency for Schools. They exclude other spending by local authorities, who remain responsible for some services to GM pupils, and DFE running costs.

Assisted Places

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many pupils attended each school taking part in the assisted places scheme in 1992-93 during the year; and how many in each case were on an assisted place.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is given in the table:

Churston Grammar School

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will increase the maximum allocation for the next academic year for the Churston grammar school, Churston, to 120 pupils as requested by the school.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has not received a request to increase the standard number for Churston grammar school.

Primary School Teachers

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many responses have been received to his draft circular on the initial training of primary school teachers issued on 9 June; how many of those responses were unfavourable; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: The consultation period on my right hon. Friend's draft circular on the initial training of primary teachers lasts until the end of July. We will consider the responses carefully before making announcements. We plan to issue the circular in its final form in the early autumn.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what rules cover the personal responsibility of governors of city technology colleges; whether members are required to declare interests; what statutory provision is made for public access to information about a college or its governors' proceedings; what charter provisions apply to their activities; and whether they are subject to performance indicators.

Mr. Forth: Governors of city technology colleges hold office under schemes of government—approved under the funding agreements for the colleges. Governors must declare an interest in respect of any contract in which they have an interest and may not vote on the matter. Like maintained schools, CTCs publish prospectuses and annual reports to parents and, as companies, their annual accounts are open to public inspection. In general, the provisions of the parents charter apply to the parents of pupils at CTCs, but CTCs are independent schools and the funding agreements for the colleges predate the charter. These funding agreements provide for the supply of information on performance indicators.

Governing Bodies

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education from which categories the governing bodies of further education colleges and six-form colleges are obliged to appoint new members; what are the rules about the personal responsibility of members of the governing bodies of such colleges; if members are required to declare interest and whether a register of such interests is open to public inspection; what statutory provisions govern public access to information about a college and its governors' proceedings and for holding public meetings; to which provisions of the citizens charter or specific charters relating to their own activities they are subject; and what performance indicators are in place.

Mr. Boswell: Further education corporations were established on 30 September 1992 to conduct further education and sixth-form collegese. The composition of corporations is set out in their instrument of government, which has been prescribed by statutory instrument—1992 No. 1957 and 1992 No. 1963. New members are appointed as and when vacancies arise following the resignation, or completion of the terms of office, of existing members. The conduct of FE corporations is governed by their instruments and articles of government.

Colleges are not required to keep a register of members' interests, but corporation members are required, under the instrument of government, to declare any financial interest in the supply of work or goods to the institution or any contract concerning the institution. They must not take part in any discussions relating to a matter in which they have a financial interest nor may they vote on it. Minutes of corporation meetings are made available for inspection at the institution during normal office hours.

Governors will have a part to play in ensuring that their college meets the requirements of the forthcoming charter for further education and develops its own charter within the national framework set.

My right hon. Friend has asked the Further Education Funding Council to work with colleges on the development of performance indicators for the sector. At present, colleges collect and use whatever information they think necessary to assist them in assessing their performance. Later this year, the Department will be publishing comparative tables of the academic and vocational achievements of 16 to 18-year-olds in colleges in the further education sector, and colleges themselves will be required to publish comprehensive information on the achievements and career routes of their students.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the current total of grant-maintained schools; what are the rules about the personal responsibility of members of the government bodies of such schools; whether members are required to declare interests; what statutory provision is made for public access to information about a school and the governors' proceedings; what charter provisions apply to their activities; and whether they are subject to performance indicators.

Mr. Robin Squire: A total of 493 schools have been incorporated as self-governing—grant-maintained—in England to date. A further 170 have been approved to become self governing. Grant-maintained schools in Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

As in LEA schools, individual governors of self-governing schools are not normally personally liable for actions and decisions of the governing body. However, appeals committees members may be personally liable for the decisions they make. The Department recommends that governing bodies take out insurance against this contingency.

Members of governing bodies of self-governing schools are required by their instrument of government to declare any pecuniary interest, direct or indirect, in any matter which is to be considered at a governing body meeting.

The articles of government of a self-governing school provide that a copy of each of the instruments and articles of government, the prospectus, the governors' annual report, the audited accounts for the previous school year and non-confidential parts of the minutes of meetings of the governing body must be made available for public inspection.

The parents charter makes a number of references to the responsibilities of self-governing schools' governing bodies. These responsibilities are set out in full in the schools' articles of government.

Requirements in respect of schools' performance apply equally to self-governing and local education authority-maintained schools.

Schools Funding Agency

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education whether the Schools Funding Agency, its chairperson and members will be subject to (a) surcharge, (b) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for public access to information, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter; and whether the chairperson and members will be required to declare relevant interests, in a form available for inspection.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information is as follows:

	Declare interests
Surcharge	No
Investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner	No
Scrutiny by National Audit Office	Yes
Statutory provisions for public access to information	No
Performance indicators	Yes
Citizens' Charter	Presumed yes
Requirement to declare an interest	[1]Yes

[1] Availability to be considered

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 6 July, Official Report, columns 95-96, whether his Department maintains a register of the interests declared by chairpersons and board members of the executive non-departmental public bodies, available for inspection at his or at the main offices of the eight relevant bodies.

Mr. Boswell: As each of our non-departmental public bodies maintains a proper degree of operational independence, the Department does not recognise a need to maintain a central register giving these details. It is for the bodies themselves to decide whether to maintain records of their members' interests.

Drugs

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he intends to take to promote drugs education and prevention within the education system.

Mr. Forth: We will continue our policy of stimulating, encouraging and supporting work within schools and the youth service, with a view to ensuring that young people are made aware of the dangers of drug misuse, and are equipped with the attitudes and skills they need to resist pressures to use or misuse them. In addition, all maintained schools are already required to promote education about drugs as part of national curriculum science.

Pupil Exclusions

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to publish details of the number of pupils excluded from individual grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Forth: Information on permanent exclusions from maintained schools in England was collected by the Department over a two-year period, starting with summer term 1990, under the national exclusions reporting system. The results of the survey were published on 23 April and showed that a total of 6,743 permanent exlusions had been reported, with 2,910 in year one and 3,833 in year two. This information was collected for purposes of national aggregation and it is not possible to provide a breakdown of the figures by school or by sector because of assurances given as to confidentiality.

Further Education Funding Councils

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the names of the members of the regional committees of the further education and higher education funding councils who have already been nominated, together with the regional committees to which no appointment has yet been made and the date on which any outstanding appointment will be made; which organisations were consulted on the appointments; and what was the form and nature of any such consultation.

Mr. Boswell [pursuant to his reply, 16 June 1993, c. 599]: I am pleased to announce the appointment of Lady Mary Holborow as chairman of the south-west regional committee of the Further Education Funding Council.

EMPLOYMENT

Devon and Cornwall TEC

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of trainees on courses sponsored by Devon and Cornwall training and enterprise council entered full-time employment in the year to March.

Miss Widdecombe: The latest full year for which figures are available is April 1991 to March 1992. During that year, 21 per cent. of those leaving employment training went into full-time employment and 7 per cent. into part-time employment. A further 11 per cent. undertook activities including training, full-time education, work experience or voluntary work.

Over the same period, 56 per cent. of those leaving youth training went into full-time employment and 4 per cent. into part-time employment. A further 12 per cent. went into other training or full-time education.

Training

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest information he has on the number of people who are participating on training courses which are supported by the European social fund; how many are operated by (a) training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies, (b) local authorities and further education colleges and (c) voluntary organisations; how many people will benefit from ESF training courses in the current operational year; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The latest information available on numbers of participants on European social fund—ESF—courses in 1993 organised by the three organisational sectors requested, is as follows:

Sector	Beneficiaries
Training and Enterprise Councils, Local Enterprise Companies (including Departmental programmes to help the unemployed):	692,000
Local Authorities/Further Education Colleges:	438,000
Voluntary sector:	106,000

Overall we currently expect some 1,308,000 people to benefit from ESF-funded training during 1993. This figure is likely to rise as further projects continue to be approved.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement on the implementation of the training for work scheme.

Miss Widdecombe: Training for work became available from 29 March as a major part of the range of opportunities available to help people back to work. It is being delivered in all parts of the country by the network of training and enterprise councils.

Methyl Bromide

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on reported cases of (a) illness, (b) eye infections and (c) cases of skin damage directly related to contact with methyl bromide.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In the period January 1987 to March 1993, a total of four cases of reported ill health, relating to two incidents, were confirmed by the pesticides incidents appraisal panel as being attributable to the use of methyl bromide.

Information has also been obtained from incidents reported to the Health and Safety Executive under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1986. Since these regulations came into force, five such cases have been reported. These included one case of nose irritation; one of respiratory irritation and neurological symptons; and one of acute irritant effects.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Miss Widdecombe: The Government continue to help small businesses through improvements to the business climate, through deregulation and through specific programmes of support and assistance.

Measures operated by the Department to assist small businesses include:

The Business Start Up Scheme (formerly the Enterprise Allowance Scheme), which provides an allowance and training/counselling support in the early months of trading to unemployed people who start their own businesses. Its performance is measured in terms of numbers taking up support and the survival rate of these businesses. Around 50,000 people were awarded an allowance in 1991-92, and just over 40,000 in 1992-93. Survey evidence has consistently shown that of those people completing the full term of Enterprise Allowance, approximately 76 per cent. were still trading 6 months later (ie 18 months after start-up).

From April 1991, Training and Enterprise Councils (TECs) have been delivering the Scheme and have enjoyed considerable local discretion in its design and selection criteria. They have been placing greater emphasis on increasing the quality of the businesses they support in order to improve survival. Evaluation studies assessing the performance of the Business Start Up Scheme have recently been completed and are expected to be published in due course.

The Department makes significant funds available to TECs to enable them to support the development of small businesses. TECs provide a varied range of help including consultancy support, advice and guidance and training audits. TECs increasingly are linking this support to achievement of the Investors in People national standard. Action materials to specifically help small businesses achieve the standard have been developed. Investors in People sets a standard for the training and development of people to achieve business objectives—a vital requirement for business, regardless of size. Of the 307 organisations which have met the standard so far, 179 are employers with less than 200 employees. There are over 3,300 employers committed to achieving the Standard, including many small businesses.

Blind and Partially Sighted People

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what arrangements his Department makes to ensure that blind and partially sighted people have access to information produced by his Department where it has not been published in alternative media such as Braille, large print or tape;

(2) what is his Department's policy on which information produced by his Department is published in alternative media to standard print such as Braille, tape or large print.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department aims to provide the general public with a wide range of information relating to employment and training. We ensure that important information is available in formats other than hard text to make it accessible to people who are blind or visually impaired. The decision about what is translated depends on the content and intended audience for the document. Some information is provided in direct translation, for example, the job seekers charter and leaflets on the Department's services, such as "Make It Work". The Department is most likely to produce translations of material that covers a summary of services or programmes rather than producing several versions of small leaflets. We can arrange for correspondence to be sent in Braille where it is requested.

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list all those services or functions contracted out in his Department and agencies, since November 1991, in which the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1988 were not applied.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department currently contracts out a large proportion of its services and functions. To list them all would involve disproportionate cost. The application of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 depends upon the facts of each case. The regulations have not been treated as applying to any of the activities contracted out since November 1991.

Data Processing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the numbers of staff by grade that are employed in his Department and Agencies in the automatic data processing functional specialism.

Miss Widdecombe: The Employment Department group employs a total of 732 staff in the automatic data processing—ADP—functional specialism. A breakdown of staff numbers by grade within the Department and its agencies as in July 1993 is given in the table:

Miss Widdecombe: The information available is given in the table. Information is not readily available in the form requested before 1989:

	Executive staff employed in Scotland	Executive staff employed in the United Kingdom
1993	1,945	22,334
1992	1,902	22,238

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of the public bodies for which he is responsible hold meetings in public; and if he will list them.

Miss Widdecombe: The following public bodies hold meetings in public:

Industrial Tribunals
Employment Appeal Tribunal
Civil Service Arbitration Tribunal
Central Arbitration Committee (for hearings into complaints about non disclosure of information).

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his reply of 6 July, Official Report, columns 107-8, whether he takes into account the interests of chairpersons and members of the boards of executive non-departmental public bodies when making appointments to these bodies; and what steps he takes to identify relevant interests.

Miss Widdecombe: Yes, appropriate steps are taken to avoid a conflict of interests, depending on the appointment.

Earnings

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment on average in terms of percentage how much female (a) part-time and (b) full-time workers earn; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Information on the earnings of female part-time and full-time workers can be found in table 19 of part A of the new earnings survey, the 1992 edition of which can be found in the Library. Part A of the 1993 new earnings survey will be published in September.

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what were the figures for average weekly earnings for (a) males and (b) females in (i) Scotland, (ii) Wales and (iii) England for 1979 and the latest year for which figures are available;

(2) what were the figures for average weekly earnings for (a) males in manual work, (b) males in non-manual work, (c) females in manual work and (d) females in non-manual work in (i) Scotland, (ii) Wales and (iii) England for 1979 and the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is published in tables 12 and 13 of part A of the new earnings survey for 1979 and 1992.

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the figures for average hourly earnings for (a) males and (b) females in (i) Scotland, (ii) Wales and (iii) England for 1979 and for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is published in tables 122 and 123 of part E of the new earnings survey for 1979 and 1992.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) of 15 July, Official Report, columns 608-12, if he will provide for Scotland, Wales and each English region equivalent figures on earnings to those given in his answer.

Maternity Rights

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when his Department intends to implement the maternity rights provisions of the Trade Union and Employment Rights Acts 1993.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The provisions will be commenced by October 1994, as the EC pregnant workers directive requiries.

Unemployment, East Midlands

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in the east midlands have been unemployed for a year or longer.

Miss Widdecombe: In April 1993 and on the unadjusted basis, 65,699 claimants had been unemployed for over a year in the east midlands region.

In winter 1992-93, also on the unadjusted basis, the number unemployed over a year according to the International Labour Organisation definition stood at 73,000.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of people in Rochdale who have completed TEC-run training courses entered full-time employment in each of the last two years.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is given in the table:

Youth training/employment training—percentage of those completing their training entering full-time employment
Rochdale training and enterprise council April 1990 to September 1992

	Youth training[1] Per cent.	Employment training Per cent.

April 1991 to March 1992	74	n/a

Source: YT follow-up survey, ET follow-up survey.
Notes:
[1] Includes Youth Training and Youth Credits, April 1991 to September 1992 information is provisional.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the total gross public expenditure on training and enterprise councils for each year since 1989-90, and projected expenditure for the years up to 1995-96, in 1991-92 prices.

Miss Widdecombe: I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Employment Statistics

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the methods used in the compiling of employment statistics.

Miss Widdecombe: A thorough review of the methods used in compiling employment statistics was conducted by the Department in 1988. As a result, my predecessors authorised a number of initiatives to improve the quality of the statistics. These included the introduction of a quarterly labour force survey in 1992; the first full census of employers for 12 years, in September this year; and the co-development with the Central Statistical Office of a new register of businesses which will be fully operational in 1995.

Pit Closures

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the level of unemployment in the travel-to-work areas where collieries have closed; and what initiatives the Government are currently taking to provide jobs in those areas.

Miss Widdecombe: Between January and June 1993, claimant unemployment fell in all those travel-to-work areas containing collieries where British Coal has ceased operations since October 1992.

The Government have made available £75 million to training and enterprise councils and the Employment Service to provide a range of training, job search and other measures to help the unemployed people affected. This £75 million forms part of a larger £200 million package of assistance involving the Employment Department, the Department of Trade and Industry, British Coal Enterprise, English Estates and other Government agencies.

Social Chapter

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what discussions he has had with his European counterparts on the social chapter.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The social chapter has not been a major topic in discussions with European Ministers. The interpretation, the extent and the use of the agreement of 11 on social policy are essentially matters for those member states who signed it.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the publication, including details of price and availability, containing the text of (a) the social chapter, (b) the social charter signed by 11 Heads of State or Government at Strasbourg in 1979, (c) the social protocol and attached agreement and (d) documents referred to in texts (a) to (c) above or necessary for construing them; and if he will state for each document its publication date and the authority for its publication.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Social Charter

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 22 July, at column 295, if he will now publish the text of the social charter signed in Strasbourg on 9 December 1989 by 11 member states of the European Community, together with a schedule of the consequential draft on effective regulations and directives with accompanying information concerning relevant security reports, debates and implementation.

Miss Widdecombe: The text of the social charter was annexed to the unnumbered explanatory memorandum submitted to the parliamentary scrutiny Committees by the Employment Department on 24 November 1989. The text of each Commission proposal under the social action programme has been deposited in Parliament and explanatory memoranda in each case have been prepared for the scrutiny Committees. All the information requested by the hon. Member is therefore already in the public domain.

Unemployment, South-east Essex

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what intiatives he is taking to assist the long-term unemployed in south-east Essex.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Long-term unemployed people in south-east Essex have access to a range of opportunities specifically aimed to give them the help they need to get back to work. These include Restart, job clubs, the job interview guarantee, training for work, and job plan workshops.

We have also recently introduced learning for work, community action and an expanded business start-up scheme for long-term unemployed people which are just a part of the 1·6 million opportunities available nationally this year through the Employment Service and training and enterprise councils to help unemployed people find the best route back to employment. This is an increase of about 600,000 opportunities on last year.

Sickness Certification

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the extent to which staff of the Employment Service have encouraged fit, unemployed persons to seek sickness certification from their general practitioners as an alternative to registering for employment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The chief executive of the Employment Service has assured me that Employment Service staff do not encourage fit, unemployed persons to seek sickness certification from their GPs. Only where clients raise doubts about their fitness and capability for work, and are willing to seek further advice from their GP will advisers suggest that they do so. If the Employment Service has doubts about their capability for work, but the client does not wish to seek further medical advice their claim will be taken and referred to the independent adjudicating authority for a decision on entitlement to an unemployment benefit.

Accident Victims (Retraining)

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what research has been undertaken by his Department into effective methods of retraining accident victims.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department has undertaken no national research specifically relating to retraining accident victims.

People with disabilities, including those whose disabilities arise from accidents, have priority under a wide range of employment and training programmes including training for work and, where eligible, learning for work and community action.

People with disabilities retain their priority status throughout their period of unemployment, or until they have entered each one of our main programmes.

Labour Market

Dr. Liam Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures he intends to take to improve the workings of the British labour market.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The aim of the Department is to support economic growth by promoting a competitive, efficient and flexible labour market. We have already taken steps to achieve this through step-by-step reforms of industrial relations and trade union law, through deregulation to reduce burdens on business and increase choice and opportunities for individuals, by encouraging training and enterprise, and by helping and requiring unemployed people actively to seek work. We need to maintain these policies if United Kingdom business is to remain competitive.

Health and Safety at Work

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will consolidate the current statutory instruments on health and safety at work.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 18 May 1993, Official Report, column 129.

Young People

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of 16 and 17-year-olds are in full-time employment.

Miss Widdecombe: The latest available estimates, not seasonally adjusted, from winter 1992-93 labour force survey shows that 12 per cent. of 16 and 17-year-olds in Great Britain were in full-time employment. Seventy per cent. of this age group were in full-time education.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what number of 16 and 17-year-olds are currently without a job, a place in higher education or a place on a training scheme.

Miss Widdecombe: I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to the oral answer of 16 February, Official Report, column 116, what information is available from the labour force survey about the number of those aged 16 and 17-year-olds unemployed according to the International Labour Organisation definition in autumn 1992 and winter 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The available information appeared in a feature article in the July 1993 Employment Gazette —"Economic Activity of 16 and 17 year olds", table 1, page 308.

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to increase training provision and other employment measures for young people in Hartlepool.

Miss Widdecombe: Teesside training and enterprise council has a wide range of measures in place to help young people in Hartlepool, including the guarantee of a place on youth training.

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what initiatives his Department is taking to improve career opportunities for young people in London.

Miss Widdecombe: Youth training and training credits are available to young people through training and enterprise councils in London, as elsewhere. These offer a wide range of training opportunities which will enhance and improve the career opportunities of those young people participating.

Training and enterprise councils will also continue to work in collaboration with the careers service to further develop new and innovative training opportunities for young people.

Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what number of 16 and 17-year-olds are currently without a job, a place in higher education or a place on a training scheme.

Miss Widdecombe: I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Women in Management

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what initiatives he has encouraged to improve opportunities for women to progress into senior management positions.

Miss Widdecombe: I am convinced that every woman with the necessary inclination, ambition and ability should be allowed a fair and equal opportunity to progress to the highest level possible of her chosen profession. I wholly endorse the aims of the employer-led Opportunity 2000 initiatives, which seeks to enhance the quality and quantity of women's participation in the work force and the Department seeks to be one of the truly exemplary employers in the campaign.

The "New Horizons for Women" initiative promotes a whole range of opportunities for women and publications such as "The Best of Both Worlds" and "Rising to the Challenge" encourage employers to adopt flexible working practices, which can be of benefit to many women with responsibilities beyond the workplace, and to consider the valuable contribution which women have to make to the world of work.

Horse Racing

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are estimated to be employed in jobs relating to the horse racing industry; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is not available. Employment relating to the horse racing industry cannot be distinguished from other leisure industries within activity reading 9791—sport and other recreational services—of the Standard Industrial Classification 1980.

Manufacturing Employment

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on manufacturing employment in the west midlands.

Miss Widdecombe: In March 1993, there were 547,000 employees in manufacturing industries in the west midlands.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of manufacturing employment has been lost since January 1990.

Miss Widdecombe: Between January 1990 and May 1993, the number of employees in manufacturing in Great Britain fell by 18 per cent. However, the fall in manufacturing employment is not new; its peak was as far back as 1966. In addition since March 1983, reductions in manufacturing employment have been more than offset by increases in other parts of the economy.

Working Population

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in the United Kingdom are in work as a percentage of the total population of working age; and what is the average figure in the European Community.

Miss Widdecombe: The United Kingdom percentage in spring 1991 was 70·2 per cent. compared with an EC average of 61·6 per cent. based upon the latest published EC labour force survey report. The most recent available estimate for the United Kingdom is for winter 1992-93 when the percentage was 70 per cent.

Home Workers

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his Department's assessment of the number of home workers in Leeds, West.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is estimated that in West Yorkshire some 19,000 people work at home as their main job, including those who are self-employed. Estimates of the numbers of homeworkers are not available for Leeds, West or other local areas.

Business Start-up Scheme

Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of those enterprises started under the business start-up scheme are still trading after three years.

Miss Widdecombe: The business start-up scheme has not been operational long enough to give the information asked for. The business start-up scheme replaced the enterprise allowance scheme and only came into operation in April 1991. The full results of a survey of those starting the scheme in May 1991 is to be published later this year. This shows that 71 per cent. were still operating the same business 18 months after starting.

Nuclear Safety

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he wil make a statement on the work of the Health and Safety Executive in relation to Sellafield.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate and field operations divisions carry out regular inspections of BNFL's operations at Sellafield under the Health and Safety at Work etc, Act 1974; the relevant statutory provisions of the Nuclear Installations Act 1965, as amended and other relevant legislation.

Redundancy Legislation

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to review the redundancy legislation.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Minor changes to the statutory notification and consultation procedures were made in the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Act. These provisions will come into force on 30 August. We have no plans to change the arrangements for statutory redundancy payments.

Careers Service

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much expenditure (a) has already been incurred and (b) will be incurred in implementing those provisions of the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Act 1993 relating to the careers service.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 26 July 1993.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many women in (i) Scotland, (ii) Wales and (iii) England were economically active whose youngest child was aged (a) 0-four years, (b) five to 10 years, (c) 11 to 15 years, or had no children, for the latest year for which figures are available.

Miss Widdecombe: The latest available estimates from the winter 1992-93 labour force survey are given in the table:

Number of economically active women by age of youngest dependent child. Winter 1992-93 (not seasonally adjusted)
Women aged 16 and over — Thousands

	All economically active women	Age of youngest dependent child 0-4	5-10	11-15	No dependent children under 16
Great Britain	12,034	1,666	1,435	1,125	7,808
England	10,409	1,432	1,237	968	6,772
Wales	562	86	70	51	356
Scotland	1,063	148	129	106	680

Source: Labour Force Survey.

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish figures for the projected labour force in Scotland for each year until 2001 (a) for males and (b) for females.

Miss Widdecombe: The figures were published in the June 1992 issue of the Employment Gazette—table 1, pages 294-5—and more detailed analyses are available from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the annual labour activity rate for (a) males and (b) females in Scotland between the current year and his Department's published figure for 2000.

Miss Widdecombe: The figures were published in the June 1992 issue of the Employment Gazette—table 4, pages 300-1—and more detailed analyses are available from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list how many (a) males, full time, (b) females, full time and (c) females, part time in Scotland were covered by collective agreements at work both in 1979 and for the latest full year for which such figures are available.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is not available in the form requested. However, information on the proportion of employees covered by collective agreements in the groups specified, as at April 1992, is shown in the table. Comparable figures for 1979 are available only at disproportionate cost.

Proportion of employees covered by a collective agreement in Scotland, April 1992

Category of employee	Proportion covered per cent.
(a) Full-time males	35
(b) Full-time females	42
(c) Part-time females[1]	50

[1] The survey does not cover all part-time female employees, only those that are members of pay-as-you-earn (PAYE) schemes.

EC Social Policy

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to consult (a) employers or their representatives and (b) employees and trade unions over the European Community green paper on social policy.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The European Commissioner for Social Affairs has already sought the views of all interested parties on his proposal to publish a green paper on the future of European social policy. After the green paper has been published the Commissioner will initiate a further extensive round of consultation. I am sure that employers and trades unions will want to play a full part in that debate.

Child Care

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what response he has received to the document, "Good Childcare, Good Business", produced by Employers for Childcare, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Miss Widdecombe: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will be meeting the organisers of Employers for Childcare in the near future, when they will discuss the issues raised in their document.

Social and Labour Affairs Council

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what matters he expects to be discussed at the next meeting of the EC Social and Labour Affairs Council.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The agenda for the next meeting of the EC Labour and Social Affairs Council on 12 October has not yet been fixed.

However, the Belgian presidency has indicated that it expects the agenda to include some or all of the following items:

Directive on Atypical Work
Directive on Posted Workers
Directive on European Works Councils
Directive on the Protection of Young Workers
Directive on Biological Agents (final adoption)
Directive on Parental Leave
Directive on the Reversal of the Burden of Proof in Sex Discrimination Cases Initiative on Employment
The Commission's Green Paper on Social Policy

Disability

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps his Department have taken against training and enterprise councils who have been found to be not making available suitable high quality training for people assessed to have a disability.

Miss Widdecombe: Each training and enterprise council sets out in its business plan its proposals for the year ahead including the help it can give to people with disabilities. Regional directors regularly review the performance of each TEC to ensure that it delivers the agreed plan. There are a range off sanctions which the Department can bring to bear.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many disabled directors there are on each training and enterprise council board; and what percentage of the TEC boards this represents.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is not available.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many disabled people in the United Kingdom of working age are neither in work nor in training; and what percentage of the disabled population in this age group this represents.

Miss Widdecombe: The labour force survey—LFS—asks people of working age if they currently have any health problem or disability which limits the kind of paid work they can do. Estimates based on answers to this question will include people with short-term health problems and disabilities as well as those registered as disabled.

The latest estimates show that of people in the United Kingdom with such health problems or disabilities, 523,000—10·4 per cent.—were unemployed on the ILO definition.

These figures are based on estimates for Great Britain in winter 1992-93 and those for Northern Ireland in spring 1992 and are not seasonally adjusted.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of training and enterprise council public meetings were fully accessible for disabled people in (a) 1990-91, (b) 1991-92 and (c) 1992-93.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not available. It is a matter for each training and enterprise council to ensure proper access to their annual public meetings.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is meant by the term "suitable high quality training" as used in the 1993-94 training and enterprise council operating agreement in relation to the availability of training for people assessed to have a disability.

Miss Widdecombe: Suitable high-quality training means training that meets the requirements placed on training and enterprise councils' providers to achieve the standards of approved training organisation status or agreed alternative.

From April 1994, new revised arrangements will come into effect covering all TEC products and services. These build on the existing arrangements and the considerable development work undertaken by TECs.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many disabled employees there are within each training and enterprise council; and what percentage of the work force this represents.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. As an employer, every training and enterprise council is required to satisfy the statutory obligations of the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps are being taken by his Department to measure and compare high quality training for disabled people within and between training and enterprise council areas.

Miss Widdecombe: Training and enterprise councils' business plans are examined before approval to ensure that they have included objectives and targets for helping people with disabilities. TECs are required by their contract to provide regular performance statistics relating to the training, and placing, of people with disabilities. The Department's regional contracts managers review TECs' achievements against objectives at regular intervals.

Performance reports produced as part of this monitoring process are used to ensure that appropriate action is being taken and that TECs are delivering the agreed plan within the terms of their contract.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of training and enterprise council resources are spent on disabled people in each TEC.

Miss Widdecombe: This information is not available in the form requested.

Astra Training

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action he intends to take to secure training programmes undertaken by, and the future employment of, staff employed by Astra Training in Sheffield.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department contracts with training and enterprise councils for the delivery of training programmes in their areas. It places a contractual obligation on the TECs, where a training provider closes, to find the trainees concerned suitable alternative training. This provision will come into effect in the event that Astra's receivers close any skillcentres. We understand that skillcentres are continuing to offer services to customers while the trading position is reviewed.

Where redundancies take place among Astra's staff, whether in Sheffield or elsewhere, the full facilities of the Employment Service are available to help the people concerned find alternative work. The redundancy payments service is already in touch with the receiver to ensure that where redundancies do occur, statutory payments are made as soon as possible.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what residual obligation his Department has to the staff and trainees currently employed by the collapsed firm Astra.

Miss Widdecombe: As was made clear from the outset, the sale of the Skills Training Agency in 1990 was conducted on a clean-break basis. At the time of the sale, the Government ensured that the staff who transferred to Astra were covered by the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations and that Astra and other purchasers provided pension and redundancy rights in line with ministerial undertakings. The Department has no continuing obligation to Astra staff who were civil servants. The Department's contract with training and enterprise councils requires suitable alternative training to be found for trainees whose training is affected by any closure of a training centre.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action he intends to take to provide training facilities to replace those lost by the collapse of Astra.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department contracts with training and enterprise councils for the delivery of training programmes in their areas. It places a contractual obligation on the TECs, where a training provider closes, to find the trainees concerned suitable alternative training. This provision will come into effect in the event that Astra's receivers close any skillcentres. We understand that skillcentres are continuing to offer services to customers while the trading position is reviewed.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what protection for the staff employed in the training centres were negotiated with Astra plc when the sale was made.

Miss Widdecombe: The sale of skillcentres to Astra—and other purchasers—in 1990 was governed by the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations—TUPE. This meant that those terms and conditions to which staff were entitled and which were covered by TUPE transferred with staff to their new employment. In addition the Government required purchasers to provide pensions broadly comparable to those applying to the civil service, and redundancy rights at least equivalent to the civil service terms in force at the date of sale. These measures prevented changes being made to terms and conditions for reasons due to the transfer itself, but were not agreed in perpetuity.

North Norfolk Action Scheme

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average amount paid per year for each person involved in the north Norfolk action scheme to each of the providers and the average amount paid to providers nationally in similar schemes.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Sir Ralph Howell, dated 27 July 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to him about the average amount paid per year for each person involved in North Norfolk Action to each of the providers and the average amount paid to providers nationally in similar schemes. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

North Norfolk Action was set up on 10 May to pilot a combination of work experience and intensive case load support to people unemployed over six months. The work experience is full-time on projects of benefit to the community which would not otherwise be done. Whilst participating, people also receive help in looking for permanent jobs.

There are currently three providers of North Norfolk Action, North Norfolk County Council, Community Rural Aid, NACRO. They are paid an average of £2,840 per year for each person involved in the programme. This is to cover the cost of:

—supervisors wages;
—tools and equipment;
—Health and Safety;
—Jobskills training;
—First Aid training;
—transport; and
—administration costs.

The only programme similar to North Norfolk Action will be Community Action. This was announced in the Budget in March and will allow unemployed people to do work of community benefit. Providers of Community Action which is about to start on 27 July as paid an average of £2,080 per year per person. However Community Action providers work on a part-time basis for up to 21 hours each week. As with North Norfolk Action participants will receive an allowance equivalent to their weekly benefit rate plus £10.

I hope that this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Youth Training

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total number of young people who entered youth training in each of the last five years in the London East training and enterprise council area; and what were the qualifications they received in each year.

Miss Widdecombe: I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Unlawful Industrial Action

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how he intends to fund the Commissioner for Protection Against Unlawful Industrial Action.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The new Commissioner for Protection Against Unlawful Industrial Action is established under section 22 of the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Act 1993, which received Royal Assent on 1 July.

The new Commissioner for Protection Against Unlawful Industrial Action will be independent of Government and free from ministerial direction. The commissioner has been established as a non-departmental public body to ensure this independence, while ensuring proper accountability and financial propriety.

The commissioner can provide material assistance, on application, to those individuals contemplating or taking proceedings against trade unions under the new "citizen's right" provision of the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Act 1993. This provision allows individuals to bring court proceedings to halt the unlawful organisation of industrial action which deprive them of goods or services.

Parliamentary approval for expenditure on the expenses of the new commissioner will be sought in a supplementary estimate for the Department of Employment's programmes and central services vote—class V. vote 1. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £80,000 will be met by a repayable advance from the Contingencies Fund:

Commissioner for the Protection Against Unlawful Industrial Action (Class V, Vote 1)—£120,000.

Job Clubs

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many job clubs were operational for each region and for Great Britain as a whole at the latest available date; and how many of them in each region catered for groups with special needs.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Ms Clare Short, dated 26 July 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to him about the number of Jobclubs operational for each region and for Great Britain as a whole, and how many of them cater for people with special needs. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The information is given in the attached table. It shows the number of standard and specialist Jobclubs by region and for Great Britain as a whole at the end of June 1993.

My colleague John Cooper wrote to you in December last year on the subject of Jobclubs for people with special needs. As he said then, all Jobclubs accept members who either have some degree of literacy or language problem, have a disability or have been in prison. Similarly, all Jobclubs are open to people seeking executive or managerial work.

Since he wrote to you the evaluation of the supportive Jobclub network has been carried out. As you know supportive Jobclubs provide additional help to people with more severe problems who cannot cope in a standard Jobclub, such as people with literacy or language problems, or those with a severe lack of confidence. The evaluation, which was completed in March 1993, identified a number of good practices within the network and found that supportive Jobclubs are successful in placing unemployed people directly into work. On the strength of these findings further places will be available this year to help people with special needs in supportive Jobclubs.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Inward Investment

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what specific measures his Department takes to encourage the creation of jobs by inward investment in the United Kingdom.

Miss Widdecombe: In addition to the specific activities of the Department of Trade and Industry's Invest in Britain Bureau, one of the lowest rates of corporation tax in the developed world, and a Government who support the enterprise culture, overseas investors are attracted by the United Kingdom's labour market. Fewer days are now lost to industrial action since records began more than 100 years ago, the regulatory burden on employers is light and the labour market is the most flexible in Europe. That is why the United Kingdom attracts nearly 41 per cent. of the stock of Japanese investment and over 36 per cent. of the stock of United States investment into the EC. This continuing investment, which has created or safeguarded more than 275,000 jobs over the last five years, would be put at risk by adopting the added costs and restrictions of the social chapter, which the United Kingdom will continue to resist.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the effect of the recession on the willingness of employers to find extra money to employ disabled people.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 23 July 1993]: We are pleased that employment of people with disabilities has held up well during the recession; the Employment Service placed more than 40,000 unemployed people with disabilities into jobs during 1992-93, well ahead of its target. However, we recognise the difficulties encountered by disabled people in the employment market. It is for reasons such as these that we have special employment provision for disabled people and give disabled people priority for a place on our main employment and training schemes.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to improve the employment prospects for people with disabilities in Yorkshire and Humberside; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 26 July 1993]: We will continue to encourage employers to provide opportunities for disabled people through programmes of education and persuasion, backed by practical help, in Yorkshire and Humberside as elsewhere throughout the country. Through jobcentres, people with disabilities have access to local placing assessment and counselling teams to provide advice to people with disabilities and their employers.

Three examples of innovative initiatives in Yorkshire and Humberside are a pioneering programme run by Bradford training and enterprise council to help graduates with a disability to pursue a career in management; worklink, a specialist advisory and counselling service for people with disabilities run by Barnsley and Doncaster TEC; and in Shipley and Keighley the Cellar project, supported by the Employment Service, provides disabled people with advice, guidance and support to help them obtain work placements and workshop places. From 1 April 1994 the new access to work initiative will be introduced to meet the employment needs of people with disabilities nationally.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for what proportion of its activities Thames Water Utilities Ltd. is exempt from the requirements of the regulations governing the employment of disabled persons; what are the terms of exemption permit held; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 26 July 1993]: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 27 July 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to him about what proportion of the activities of Thames Water Utilities is exempt from the requirements of the regulations governing the employment of disabled persons; and what are the terms of exemption permit held. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Thames Water Utilities Limited is, like other employers with twenty or more workers, subject to the Quota provisions of the Disabled (Persons) Employment Act 1944. It may help if I explain those provisions.

The Quota Scheme was established by the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944. Under the scheme, employers who have 20 or more workers have a duty to employ a quota of registered disabled people. The standard quota is currently set at 3 per cent. of an employer's total workforce. It is not an offence to be below quota. However, when in this situation an employer has a further duty to engage suitable registered disabled people, if any are available, when vacancies arise. A below-quota employer must not engage anyone other than a registered disabled person without first obtaining a permit to do so from the Employment Service.

The issue of a permit does not provide employers with exemption from their duties and obligations under the 1944 Act. A permit allows an employer to engage a person who is not registered as disabled. The 1944 Act sets out the criteria under which a permit can be issued, which include regard to the nature of the work, and the availability and suitability of registered disabled people.

Employers who are below quota can apply for "bulk" permits in advance to authorise a specified number of engagements over a limited period, based on the employer's estimated requirements. Bulk permits were introduced in order to keep a minimum the administrative burden for employers and the Department, whilst protecting the interests of people with disabilities. These are issued by the Jobcentre and will consider sympathetically and suitable registered disabled people who may become available.

Information about the quota or permit position of individual employers is not disclosed without their prior consent. This has been the policy of successive governments. I cannot, therefore provide the specific information you request about Thames Water Utilities. I am sorry that I cannot be of more help on this occasion.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamenatry Questions will be published in the Official Report, I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Executive Staff (Scotland)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many executive staff in the Department of Employment in (a) Dundee and (b) Scotland who have been declared as surplus to requirements; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 26 July 1993]: The Employment Department group currently has five executive staff in Scotland who have been declared as surplus to requirements. None of them is in Dundee.

Departmental Budget

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the budget for the current year for his Department in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom; and if he will list the budgets for the previous five years expressed in 1993 prices.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 26 July 1993]: The Department's current budget relates in the main to England for training programmes and to Great Britain for other programmes and activities. The responsibility for delivery of the main training programmes in Scotland was transferred to the Scottish Office in 1991-92. Detailed information prior to 1991-92 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Northern Ireland expenditure information can be obtained from my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

DEFENCE

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all those services or functions contracted out in his Department and Agencies, since November 1991, in which the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were not applied.

Mr. Aitken: The table lists services or functions contracted out as a result of market testing in the Department and agencies, since November 1991, in which the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 or, in the case of BAOR, equivalent German regulations based on the European acquired rights directive, were not applied. Similar information covering services or functions contracted out other than as a result of market testing could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Computer Consultancies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the computer consultancies employed by his Department and agencies, since November 1991, the tasks for which they were engaged, and the total cost to his Department.

Mr. Aitken: Since November 1991, my Department has placed 509 contracts worth a total of £23 million for consultancies related to administrative computer work. In addition, a number of divisions within my Department are empowered to place local orders for computer consultancy up to a maximum value of £25,000 per order; there were approximately 4,000 orders totalling some £1·2 million in this category.

I regret that it is not possible to provide more details without incurring disproportionate costs.

Exports

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what disaggregated information he can give by country of the defence equipment listed for export under table I.11 of "UK Defence Statistics 1993" under the line listing total value of exports to the middle east and north Africa.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to the United Kingdom return to the United Nations arms register, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Blind and Partially Sighted People

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what arrangements his Department makes to ensure that blind and partially sighted people have access to information produced by his Department where it has not been published in alternative media such as Braille, large print or tape;

(2) what is his Department's policy on which information produced by his Department is published in alternative media to standard print such as Braille, tape or large print.

Mr. Aitken: With the exception of recruitment literature and application forms, the information produced by my Department is not available in alternative media for public use, although it would be possible to provide this if it were cost effective to do so. Internal information, however, can usually be made available to staff in alternative media where there is a demand.

US Bases

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those bases and facilities operated or leased by United States armed forces that have been returned to his Department's control since June 1992.

Mr. Hanley: The list of bases and facilities made available to the United States visiting forces at the following locations and which have been returned to Ministry of Defence control since June 1992 is as follows:

RAF Northolt

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the specialist qualifications of Dr. Pocock in (a) air transport, (b) the operation of aircraft or (c) otherwise to conduct the study commissioned by his Department into RAF communications flying from RAF Northolt.

Mr. Hanley: Dr. Pocock is a senior official with long experience of the Ministry of Defence. It is not expected that a scrutineer will have specialist qualifications in the area of his study: his job is to bring a fresh and independent perspective for Ministers and management to consider. He can of course draw on specialist advice as necessary.

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the terms of reference of Dr. Pocock's study for his Department into RAF communications flying from RAF Northolt; and when and to whom he will report his conclusions.

Mr. Hanley: The study is part of the Government's programme of efficiency scrutinies under the supervision of the Cabinet Office efficiency unit. Its aim is to establish the scope for greater effectiveness and efficiency in RAF communications flying which involves a number of RAF stations. The study requires examinations of existing patterns of demand, procedures and costs; the identification of trends; and the consideration of new arrangements. The recommendations go to Ministers and the permanent secretary in the Ministry of Defence, as well as to the Government's efficiency adviser. The report was completed on 13 July 1993 and its conclusions are now being assessed.

Radioactive Shells

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what year the V J battery for the testing of radioactive shells were first constructed in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Aitken: The current VJ battery was constructed between 1979 and 1980.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those sites within the United Kingdom where radioactive shells have been tested in the last 30 years.

Mr. Aitken: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to anti-armour kinetic energy penetrator rounds containing depleted uranium. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Pembroke (Mr. Ainger) on 14 June, Official Report, columns 474-75.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what year the testing of radioactive shells was first undertaken within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Aitken: I assume the hon. Member is referring to anti-armour kinetic energy penetrator rounds containing depleted uranium, DU. DU firings in the United Kingdom began with a small research programme at Eskmeals starting in 1963.

Military Equipment Exports

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the United Kingdom's 20 principal military equipment customers in terms of descending money volume of purchases.

Mr. Aitken: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to reveal details of arms sales to individual countries. However, table 1.11 of "UK Defence Statistics 1993" gives information on the value of sales broken down by region.

Radiation-related Illness

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide a breakdown of the 126 claims for compensation from radiation-related illnesses, as outlined in A5, pages 39 to 40 of the Twelfth report of the Defence Committee, HC479, Session 1989-90, by establishment as well as by year and nature; and if he will provide comparable information for periods since 1990.

Mr. Aitken: The tables give details of claims made—not necessarily followed up by the claimant or accepted—over the periods referred to in the Defence Committee report HC479, Session 1989-90 and the period from 1990.

Atomic Weapons Establishments

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) all laws, statutes and regulations which AWE Aldermaston could claim Crown immunity prior to 1 April and (b) all laws, statutes and regulations which Hunting BRAE, as managing contractors of AWE Aldermaston, can claim Crown immunity from; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Prior to 1 April 1993, all AWE sites were owned and operated by the Crown. It is a well-established rule that the Crown is not bound by statute unless this is specifically stated, or it is clear that the Crown is to be bound by implication. To list all legislation from which AWE could have claimed Crown immunity prior to 1 April 1993 would therefore involve disproportionate effort and cost. However, even in circumstances where the Crown is not bound by legislation, it is Government policy that it should comply as though such requirements apply to it, wherever this is appropriate and practicable.

Special provisions relating to the operator of the AWE after contractorisation on 1 April 1993 are set out in the schedule to the AWE Act 1991.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions AWE Aldermaston is having with the nuclear installations inspectorate regarding the possibility of providing a site licence for the atomic weapons establishments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: In the studies leading up to the contractorisation of the atomic weapons establishment, my Department held discussions with the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate concerning the possible licensing of appropriate sites of the atomic weapons establishments. These discussions are planned to continue following the HSE review of health and safety at AWEs and in the light of the conclusions of that review.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what provisions now govern the liability of contractors of the atomic weapons establishments, to prosecution by the Health and Safety Executive for any breaches of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1976.

Mr. Aitken: The contractor operating the atomic weapons establishment, Hunting BRAE Ltd., is subject to the full range of legal sanctions available to Health and Safety Executive inspectors under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974.

Defence Commitments

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the United Kingdom's overseas defence commitments by country in (a) 1980, (b) 1985 and (c) 1993; and what was the infantry manpower required to meet each of those commitments;

(2) if he will list the United Kingdom's domestic defence commitments in (a) 1980, (b) 1985 and (c) 1993; and what was the amount of infantry manpower required to meet each of those commitments.

Mr. Hanley: The United Kingdom's defence commitments worldwide are set out in the "Statement on the Defence Estimates" for 1980, 1985 and 1993; overall figures for deployments of each of the armed forces are set out in volume II of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates" for 1980 and 1985, and in "United Kingdom Defence Statistics 1993". Figures for infantry personnel stationed in the United Kingdom and overseas for 1980, 1985 and 1993 are as follows;

Country	1980	1985	1993
United Kingdom	29,041	26,147	24,654
Germany	11,152	9,921	5,915
Cyprus	1,181	1,162	904
Gibraltar	581	622	18
Hong Kong	790	801	671
Caribbean	523	574	487
Falkland Islands	—	—	175
Others	541	2,529	1,548

Notes:

1. Separate figures are not available for the Falkland Islands for 1980 and 1985. Figures for those years are included under "Others".
2. Figures for Belize are included under "Caribbean".

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the sufficiency of United Kingdom Army personnel to meet (a) its domestic defence commitments and (b) its overseas defence commitments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The size of the British Army matches its commitments at home and overseas.

Staff Numbers

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 19 July, Official Report, column 87-88, on the numbers of civilian and service staff in post, if he will publish the comparable figures for 1 January 1990.

Mr. Hanley: The information is as follows:

	1 April 1990
Civilian staff in post
Grade 3	165
Grade 5	1373
Service staff in post
Major Generals (and equivalents)	149
Brigadiers (and equivalents)	393

[1] Civilian data for 1 January 1990 are not available.

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the Army's manpower in thousands in (a) 1980, (b) 1992, (c) 1993 and (d) 1994; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The strength of the Regular Army, excluding Gurkhas, as at 1 April of the years in question is as follows:
(a) 1980—159,000, (b) 1992—145,000, (c) 1993—135,000 and (d) 1994—120,000 (current forecast).

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the percentage reduction, since the "Options for Change" announcements in (a) first division civil servants and (b) executive officers employed by the Ministry of Defence; and what are the corresponding reductions in armed forces' uniformed manpower.

Mr. Hanley: The information is as follows:

	1 April 1990	1 April 1993	Percentage change
First division civil servants	4,071	3,825	−4·78
Colonels and equivalents and above	2,074	1,914	−7·71
Executive officers	42,467	39,877	−6·10
2nd Lieutenants–Lt Colonels and equivalents	38,456	37,380	−2·80

Note:
First Division civil servants are taken to be Grades 1-7. Executive officers are taken to be those in the executive band in the Grades of Senior Executive Officer, Higher Executive Officer and Executive Officer Grades.

Northern Ireland

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much infantry manpower was deployed in Northern Ireland in (a) 1980, (b) 1990, (c) 1991 and (d) 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Gurkha Pensioners

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for how many years it has been the practice of Her Majesty's Government to provide free medical services to Gurkha pensioners in Nepal; whether this has included provision of free medicines; and what steps are proposed to maintain such provision.

Mr. Hanley: Although the Government have no obligation to provide medical services, free or otherwise, to Gurkha pensioners in Nepal the Ministry of Defence has since 1969 provided funding, in the form of grant in aid, to the Gurkha Welfare Trust—GWT—a charity whose operating arm, the Gurkha Welfare Scheme, runs a welfare service in Nepal for Gurkha ex-service men. Although at its introduction the grant was intended to cover administrative costs and medicines, in 1973 the GWT requested that the grant be used solely for administrative costs; the salaries of the field and support staff and the rent of offices. This request was granted on the basis that the cost of providing drugs and medical care would be met from the trust's charitable funds. There are no plans to change this arrangement.

In addition, Gurkha pensioners were also able to receive free treatment at the British military hospital in Dharan in eastern Nepal which provided medical care including medicines to serving British Gurkhas and their dependants on a no-cost basis from its opening in 1960 until it was handed over to the Nepalese Government in 1990.

Helicopters

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the EH101 utility support helicopter for the Royal Air Force meets his detailed specification justification.

Mr. Aitken: We have made good progress in defining our support helicopter requirement, and we hope to be in a position to announce our procurement strategy soon.

Property Disposals

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the book value of the land and buildings disposed of by his Ministry in each region of the United Kingdom, for each year from 1988-89 until 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The Ministry of Defence does not maintain a comprehensive set of book values of its land and buildings.

Danger Money

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) which regiments currently receive extra payments in respect of dangerous postings; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the amount per month for a United Kingdom service person on top of their basic salary when extra payments are made in respect of a dangerous posting.

Mr. Hanley: No United Kingdom service personnel receive extra payments in respect of dangerous postings.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the agreed code of practice to eliminate racial discrimination and promote equal opportunities in the Army will be made public.

Mr. Hanley: We intend to publish a code of practice on race relations in the armed forces in the autumn. The code will be disseminated throughout the three services and I will arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

Surplus Land

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy on maximising the financial return from the sale of surplus land.

Mr. Hanley: It is my Department's policy to seek to maximise the return for the taxpayer when disposing of surplus sites. This is normally best achieved through open market competitive sale once the full planning potential of the property has been explored.

HEALTH

Information Technology

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the companies to which the information management group of the national health service management executive has awarded any contracts and the total sums of money paid to these companies.

Mr. Sackville: The information will be placed in the Library.

Tranquilliser Addiction

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assistance her Department gives to patients who have become addicted to tranquillisers and are seeking legal redress against those who marketed these drugs; what is the estimated level of tranquilliser drug addiction in the United Kingdom; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Our "Health of the Nation" strategy addresses the problems of prescribing benzodiazepines and the need to review their use, and health authorities are responsible for purchasing any treatment required. Matters of compensation, however, are for individuals to pursue with the companies concerned, if necessary through the courts, as in other areas of health care. Information about tranquilliser drug addiction is not available centrally.

Herbal Products

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what action she will take to ensure that the Committee for Proprietary Medical Products of the EC consults appropriate professional and consumer bodies at European level in respect of the continuous sale of herbal products;

(2) what representations she has received from the National Institute of Medical Herbalists regarding the recommendations of the Committee for Proprietary Medical Products of the EC that certain herbs should be removed from supply;

(3) if she will consult the National Institute of Medical Herbalists and other bodies representing consumer interests about the work of the Committee for Proprietary Medicinal Products of the EC;

(4) what information she has about the recommendations of the Committee for Proprietary Medicines of the EC in respect of the continued sale of herbal products; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The European Community Committee for Proprietary Medicines—CPMP—does consult member states, industry representative bodies and other interested parties on all draft guidelines.

Representations were received from the National Institute of Medical Herbalists—NIMH—that it had not been consulted about a list of herbs withdrawn for safety reasons compiled by the CPMP. The NIMH was advised that the list was simply a factual record of those herbs which had already been withdrawn nationally from medicinal products by one or more member states and that the list had been sent to the European Scientific Co-operative for Phytotherapy—ESCOP—in response to ESCOP's proposals for monographs on certain herbal ingredients. The list was published in the recent annual report of the CPMP.

Authorisations relating to particular medicinal products are the responsibility of the regulatory body of the member state concerned.

NHS Trusts

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by region the NHS trusts in existence or for which applications are in progress, and the direct managed units.

Mr. Sackville: This information will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 20 July, Official Report, column 114, if she will provide a list of trusts which received grants, by wave and district health authority.

Mr. Sackville: I will write to the hon. Member.

NHS Computer Procurement

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidelines her Department issues to regional health authorities on tendering procedures for supplies information system contracts;

(2) what advice her Department has issued to regional health authorities on the purchase of products related to hospital information support systems.

Mr. Sackville: I will write to the hon. Member.

Prescriptions

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish tables showing for each family health services authority—FHSA—area (a) the general practitioner indicative prescribing budgets and the general practitioner fund holders prescription budgets for 1990-91, 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94 and (b) the out-turn expenditures so far as available, with the percentage over-or under-spend together with indexes for the combined general practitioner and fund holder spend in each area in cash and standard NHS prices.

Mr. Sackville: We do not hold prescribing information in index form, the available information will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioners were requested to supply further information about their prescribing practices in the North Tyneside and Newcastle FHSA areas in 1991-92 and 1992-93; and what action was taken on such information.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Mental Health

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many complaints by or on behalf of children and young people aged under 18 years have been investigated by the Mental Health Act Commission in each year since 1985.

Mr. Bowis: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will seek to extend the remit of the Mental Health Act Commission to cover informal patients.

Mr. Bowis: We have no current plans to do so.

Zoplicone

Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what evidence she holds on the dependence risk of zoplicone in clinical usage;

(2) what representations have been made by her Department since 1989 to the manufacturers of Zimovane, in respect of their claims that there is no evidence of dependence in clinical use; and what was the outcome;

(3) what action she proposes to take against the manufacturers of Zimovane in respect of their claims that there is no evidence of dependence in clinical use.

Mr. Sackville: When zopiclone—Zimovane—was first marketed in 1989, there was no evidence from clincial studies that the drug could cause dependence. The safety data obtained post-marketing suggest that the drug has some dependence potential. These data indicate that the risk of dependence increases with dose and duration of treatment and is great in patients with a history of alcohol and drug abuse. There is little evidence of dependence if the drug is used at the licensed doses for no more than four weeks.

The manufacturers changed the prescribing information in 1990 and 1992 at the request of the Medicines Control Agency—MCA—to reflect post-marketing experience. The promotional material for zopiclone now states that the drug has minimal dependence potential when used in the short term; this claim is consistent with the available scientific evidence. The European Community Committee for Proprietary Medicinal Products is reviewing the dependence potential of all short-acting hypnotic drugs, including zopiclone. The prescribing information on dependence for all hypnotics may be amended by the MCA as a result of this review.

Drugs (Misleading Advertising)

Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on how many occasions in each of the last five years her Department prosecuted a drug product licence holder for false or misleading advertising within the meaning of section 92 of the Medicines Act 1968.

Mr. Sackville: No medicines product licence holders have been prosecuted for offences relating to misleading advertising during the last five years.

Young People (Complaints)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many complaints have been received from children and young people at each youth treatment centre since the introduction of formal compliants procedures.

Mr. Bowis: Formal complaints procedures were voluntarily introduced in the Glenthorne and St. Charles centres in 1989 and 1991 respectively. The number of complaints recorded by each centre over these periods is shown in the table.

	Glenthorne	St. Charles
April 1989-March 1990	36	—
April 1990-March 1991	44	—
April 1992-March 1993	54	12

Figures for 1991-92 were not collated as the service was under review prior to establishment as an executive unit of the Department from 1 April 1992.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many complaints have been made by or on behalf of children aged under 18 years concerning (a) hospital care, (b) clinical judgments and (c) health care in the community in each year since 1985;

(2) how many complaints by or on behalf of children and young people aged under 18 years have been made to the health service Commissioner in each year since 1985; and how many of those complaints concerned (a) health authorities, (b) the Mental Health Act Commission and (c) the Public Health Service Laboratory board.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health is she will list the date, incident, and local authority involved on each occasion when she has had reason to intervene under section 84 of the Children Act 1989.

Mr. Bowis: The power has not to date been exercised.

Complaint Procedures (Schools)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what efforts are currently being made by her Department to monitor the implementation of her Department's guidelines on the establishment of complaints procedures within independent schools.

Mr. Bowis: Independent schools which are children's homes are required by the Representations Procedure (Children) Regulations 1991 to set up a representations procedure with an independent element to consider complaints and other representations made by or on behalf of children accommodated by them but not looked after by local authorities.

Other independent schools with boarding pupils are expected, in fulfilling their duty to safeguard and promote the welfare of children accommodated by them, to have a procedure to enable the children to raise concerns which cannot be dealt with informally and to raise these with an independent person if necessary.

The social services inspectorate reviews local authorities' inspections of these schools.

Rights of the Child

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the reservations entered by her Department on the United Nations convention on the rights of the child; and what was the reason behind each reservation.

Mr. Sackville: The Government entered the following two reservations in respect of matters for which the Department of Health has responsibility. These are set out in "Treaty Series No. 44 (1992), Convention on the Rights of the Child", presented to Parliament in July 1992.

a. The United Kingdom interprets the Convention as applicable only following a live birth.
b. The United Kingdom interprets the references in the Convention to "parents" to mean only those persons who, as a matter of national law, are treated as parents. This includes cases where the law regards a child as having only one parent, for example where a child has been adopted by one person only and in certain cases where a child is conceived other than as a result of sexual intercourse by the woman who gives birth to it and she is treated as the only parent.

The reservations reflect the existing position under United Kingdom law in the fields abortion, adoption and assisted conception.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement outlining the timetable envisaged by her Department for the preparation of the report scheduled to be submitted by the United Kingdom to the United Nations committee on the rights of the child; and if she will list the organisations to be consulted in the preparation of the report.

Mr. Bowis: The United Kingdom will submit its first report to the Convention on the rights of the child, on the measures adopted by the United Kingdom to give effect to the rights recognised in the convention, by 14 January 1994, as required by article 44 of the United Nations convention.

Accident and Emergency Departments

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 20 July, Official Report, column 116, if she will give the number of accidents and emergency departments in England in each year since 1979.

Mr. Sackville: I will write to the hon. Member.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of the appointments made to public bodies by her since April 1992 have been advertised; and if she will list them.

Mr. Sackville: Information is not available centrally in respect of national health service authorities and trusts.

The posts of the director of the Health Advisory Service, who was appointed in April 1992, and the chairman of the Dental Practice Board, who was appointed in January 1993, were advertised.

The Department's aim is to appoint people from a wide range of different backgrounds and where advertising does not take place, many professional and voluntary bodies are consulted when appointments are made to public bodies.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of the public bodies for which she is responsible hold meetings in public; and if she will list them.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Knowsley, North (Mr. Howarth) on 20 July at column 121 for a list of the public bodies. All 249 health authorities and 292 national health service trusts are required to hold at least one public meeting a year.

The other public bodies which hold public meetings are as follows:

The Health Education Authority
The Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work
The English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting
The United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting
The European Year of Older People and Solidarity Between Generations

Community Child Health Services

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reason it was decided to prepare a good practice guide on community child health services including school health services.

Mr. Bowis: The guide will assist purchasers to set quality standards in contracts for child health services in the community, and providers to deliver services to meet these standards.

Fluoridation

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence she has received concerning the addition of fluoride to drinking water supplies and its danger to health.

Mr. Sackville: There is no evidence to show that adjusting the level of fluoride in drinking water to the optimal concentration of one milligram per litre has any adverse effect upon health.

Heart Treatments

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what facilities exist for pacemaker implantations and cardiac catheterisation in the Waltham Forest area; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: I will write to the hon. Member.

Care Homes

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether religious orders, or proprietors of unregistered residential care homes of fewer than four beds established prior to 1 April, are required to register within the terms of the Registered Homes (Amendment) Act 1991; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The Registered Homes (Amendment) Act 1991, which came into force on 1 April 1993, removed the exemption from the requirement to register with the local authority previously enjoyed by those running homes with fewer than four residents. This requirement applies to homes operating before 1 April 1993 as well as those opening after that date.

Religious communities are not exempt from the provisions of the Act, although registration is not required where all those being cared for have been resident with the person running the home for not less than five years.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many former in-patients of NHS psychiatric and mental handicap hospitals have been discharged to private commercial nursing homes, pursuant to arrangements made between their respective district health authority and the home's proprietor, where such arrangements include an agreement by the health authority to contribute towards the costs of the residents' treatment and care;

(2) how many residents of private commercial nursing homes registered under the Registered Homes Act 1984, currently receiving income support, were formerly in-patients of NHS psychiatric or mental handicap hospitals and were discharged into such homes by their respective district health authorities or NHS trusts; and how many of such nursing homes' residents are regarded as residing in a hospital or similar institution and receiving their in-patient treatment, pursuant to arrangements made by their local district health authority or NHS trust.

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she has taken to assure nursing home residents, their relatives, and nursing home proprietors that claimants refused income support payments as a result of the Court of Appeal's judgment in the case of Percival White v. Chief Adjudicating Officer, or whose payments are discontinued following review, will be regarded as in-patients of the national health service.

Mr. Bowis: On the information so far available, we do not believe that it has significant new implications for the care of people in nursing homes where support is provided from public funds but we will study the transcript of the judgment carefully when it is available.

Community Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost estimated during 1991 by the NHS management executive on the basis of returns received from regional health authorities of requiring strict compliance by district health authorities with the departmental guidance given in EL(90)MB/45; what steps her Department has taken to identify those district health authorities which have not complied with such guidance and that contained in EL(91)108; and what is the current estimated capital and revenue costs to those health authorities of complying with such guidance.

Mr. Bowis: The purpose of EL(90)MB/45 and EL(91)108 was to clarify the then legal position on arrangements between health authorities and voluntary and private nursing and residential homes and to advise authorities that they should take legal advice when entering into such arrangements. Authorities were not required to submit returns in response to the letters and individual arrangements are not subject to audit by the Department.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the Health Select Committee recommendation in paragraph 15 of its sixth report of Session 1992-93, "Community Care", HC 482, that the Government take further action in relation to local authorities making cash payments to disabled people to make their own personal assistance arrangements.

Mr. Bowis: We will consider all the Committee's recommendations and publish our response in due course.

Organ Donations

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress she has made with plans to identify and reimburse hospitals for costs incurred in organ donation.

Mr. Sackville: Since April 1992, national health service hospitals have been able to obtain reimbursement from central funds for the costs of maintaining potential organ donors in their intensive therapy units.

Child Birth

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the costs of having a baby in an NHS hospital for ante-natal care, delivery costs and post-natal care.

Mr. Sackville: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Ethnic Minority Patients and Staff

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the initiatives being undertaken by the NHS management executive in respect of meeting the needs of black and ethnic minority patients and staff; and what equivalent initiatives she is taking for personal social services.

Mr. Sackville: Our goal for the health and personal social services is that there should be equal opportunities for both users and employees. To achieve this, we aim that the Department—including the national health service management executive—should harness current major policies so that black and ethnic groups derive full benefit from them; and should support those national and local organisations which represent the health and social care needs of black and ethnic groups, and may also assist in meeting them.

To carry forward these aims in respect of health and health care, my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary established a task force which examined how to spread more widely the good practice which already exists in improving services for ethnic people. We hope to announce our response shortly.

In respect of employment, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has set up an informal working group to advise her on the best way forward. She is currently awaiting the group's recommendations and will consider possible action in the autumn.

To carry forward the same broad strategic aims in the provision by local authorities and others of personal social services for black and ethnic minorities, the Department funds the race equality unit which offers a consultancy service to local authority social services departments on good practice in delivering services to ethnic minorities.

In addition, the Department's social services inspectorate has adopted a policy statement on race equality which commits it to "promoting the delivery of accessible and cost-effective personal social services which are appropriate to the needs of a multi-racial and multi-cultural society, giving full regard to different needs and expectations of people from a variety of races and cultures".

It is carrying this out in various ways, including, for example, the preparation of practice guidance concerning community care in response to the inspectorate's report "Black communities—who cares?".

NHS Boards

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if board members of (a) district health authorities, (b) family health services authorities and (c) NHS trusts are required to declare interests; whether a register of such interests is maintained and available for public inspection; and to which provisions of the citizens charter or to specific charters relating to their own duties they are subject.

Mr. Sackville: Chairmen and members of health authorities and chairmen and non-executive directors of national health service trusts are required to declare pecuniary interests that could influence, or be thought to influence, their judgment of any decisions to be taken by the authority or trust of which they are a member. There is no requirement to maintain a register of interests. There are no provisions in the citizens charter or specific charters which relate explicitly to board members.

Child Migration

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will establish a public inquiry into successive Governments' responsibility for child migration to Australia until the 1960s through the assisted passage scheme set up in the Empire Settlement Acts of 1922 and 1937 and the regulations that were introduced to monitor the local authorities making use of these schemes to send children to Australia to ensure the departure of only those children who would benefit from those schemes as required by section 17(2) of the Children Act 1948.

Mr. Bowis: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) for what reasons the files (a) MH 102 1954 "Emigration" of 15 children-correspondence with the Home Office, (b) MH 102 1889 report on the "Swan Home and Coogee Home, Perth", and (c) MH 102 1882 "Correspondence about Roman Catholic Child Migrants", relating to child migrants are closed under the 75-year rule; and whether the information contained within them can be made available to British child migrants for use in tracing relatives and counselling purposes;

(2) for what reasons the files (a) MH 102 1879 "Emigration of children to Christian Brothers Schools in Australia", (b) MH 102 1880 "Correspondence concerning the emigration of children to Christian Brothers Schools in Australia" and (c) MH 102 2022 "Emigration of young people to Australia" and a report on the Riverview Salvation Army training farm, Queensland, relating to child migrants are closed under the 75-year rule; and whether the information contained within them can be made available to British child migrants for use in tracing relatives and counselling purposes.

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 19 July at column 5.

Refugees

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate has been made of the number of refugees who have not got access to a general practitioner; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: No such estimate has been made.

Trauma Operations

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) orthopaedic trauma operations and (b) trauma operations were performed in England in each year since 1990.

Mr. Sackville: I will write to the hon. Member.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many major trauma units are in operation in England; and what is the projected budget for trauma in (a) 1994, (b) 1995 and (c) 1996.

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health has been funding a pilot trauma centre at the North Staffordshire hospital centre national health service trust since 1990. The project is being evaluated by the medical care research unit in the university of Sheffield. Its report is expected before the end of 1994. Decisions on the future strategy for dealing with patients with major injuries will be taken in the light of this work.

Projected budgets for trauma are not available centrally. Individual health authorities are funded on the basis of their resident populations and it is a matter for them to determine the level of funding needed to secure a comprehensive range of health services, including the treatment of trauma, for their residents.

NHS Trust Directors (Political Affiliation)

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the regional health authorities which ask for a declaration of local political party affiliation in applications for non-executive and executive directors of NHS trusts.

Mr. Sackville: Information of this type is not available centrally. People are appointed to health authorities and trusts for their personal qualities and skills. Political affiliation is not a factor in these appointments.

Orthopaedic Surgeons

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the number of orthopaedic surgeons in England and Wales in each year since 1989.

Mr. Sackville: The available information is shown in the table.

Data on medical staff in trauma and orthopaedic surgery in England at 30 September

	1989	1990	1991
Consultant	717	755	776
Associate Specialist	53	63	72
Staff Grade	3	19	32
Senior Registrar	141	157	149
Registrar	387	387	385
Total	1,301	1,381	1,414

Notes:
1. Consultant, associate specialist and staff grade are career grades.
2. Information on senior registrar and registrar grades is included because they are doctors in higher specialist training.

Orthopaedic Consultants

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list her estimates for orthopaedic consultant posts that will be required in England in 1994, 1995 and 1996.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally. The Government encourage expansion of consultant numbers, but the Department of Health does not plan consultant numbers. Consultant expansion is a matter for local employing authorities who should have regard to the health care needs of their local population and competing priorities in planning their medical staffing.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she has identified within her Department any other candidates for agency status under the next steps initiative.

Mr. Sackville: I have decided that the medical devices directorate should be launched as an agency at the beginning of the next financial year.

The new agency will be responsible for ensuring that medical devices for sale or use in the United Kingdom meet appropriate standards of safety, quality and effectiveness and that these standards comply with the statutory scheme controlling medical devices throughout the European Community.

The agency will have more freedom to manage its affairs and clearer responsibilities within a framework of objectives, performance targets and resources agreed with Ministers.

I am confident that the move to agency status will enable the directorate to control, monitor and advise on the safety of medical devices more effectively and more efficiently, to the greater benefit of patients and users alike.

This will bring the agencies in the Department to four. The identification of other candidates is a continuing objective.

Maternity Hospitals

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each NHS region and for special health authorities for each financial year from 1989-90 onwards (a) the total number of maternities, (b) the total number of birth episodes in the maternity hospital episode system and (c) the total number of birth episodes in the maternity hospital episode system which had a maternity tail.

Mr. Sackville: I will write to the hon. Member.

NHS Staff

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many senior managers in the national health service there were on each spinal point 1 to 30; what was the flat salary on each point; and what was the annual cost of employment per whole-time equivalent on each point in each year since the introduction of these grades;

(2) what was the number of unit general managers in groups 1, 2, 3, and 4, the salary range in each group and the annual cost of employment per whole-time equivalent in each group in each year since the introduction of these grades;

(3) what was the number of district general managers in groups 1, 2 and 3, the salary range in each group and the annual cost of employment per whole-time equivalent in each group, in each year since the introduction of these grades.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 22 July 1993]: The information available is shown in the tables. Details of the annual cost of employment per whole-time equivalent in each senior manager, unit or district general manager group are not available centrally.

(a) increases in the management numbers reflect the planned and progressive introduction of general and senior management posts into the health service. This increase was not at the expense of direct patient services, as new money was secured for strengthening management which would not otherwise have been available to the national health service.

(b) Many staff who would previously have been classified in their professional capacity are now appearing under management headings. This includes a number of senior nurses along with other professional, executive and administrative staff.

Notes:
(i) Except where otherwise stated, all salary rates effective from 1 September.
(ii) Salary ranges were introduced in 1990 following a restructure of general manager pay arrangements.
(iii) Until 1990 the basic salaries for general managers could be enhanced by supplements (up to 15 per cent. and 10 per cent. for UGM and DGM posts respectively) and by performance-related pay (up to 20 per cent.). London Weighting was payable to general managers working in the London zones. From 1990 a maximum salary for each general manager post was set within the appropriate pay range. Managers are usually appointed below these maxima and move towards them according to performance. Non-superannuable, non-recurring annual bonuses of up to 8 per cent. depending on performance may be paid to managers on the maxima for their posts.
Geographical allowances may be paid in the south-east of England.
(iv) The UGM5 grade was assimilated into UGM4 with the restructuring in 1990.

Folic Acid

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further research she intends to initiate into links between the use of folic acid and reduction in birth defects and heart disease.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 23 July 1993]: The Department is currently exploring ways in which the mechanisms being set up to monitor the prevalence of neural tube defects following the issue of advice about folic acid in pregnancy, can be enhanced to include the prevalence of other common and major defects. Copies of the advice PL/CMO(92)18 and PL/CNO(92)12 are available in the Library.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Training Courses

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the latest information he has available on the number of people participating in (a) action for community employment, (b) the youth training programme, (c) the job training programme, (d) the enterprise allowance scheme, (e) job clubs and (f) Restart courses; how many participants are expected to participate in each programme in 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: There are no Restart courses run in Northern Ireland. Under a Restart programme people who have been unemployed for 26 weeks or more are interviewed every 26 weeks when training needs and employment opportunities are discussed with a view to helping them find work. Otherwise the information is as follows:

Scheme	Number of participants at 30 June 1993	Number expected to participate in 1993-94
ACE	9,561	9,500
YTP	9,806	12,500
JTP	4,155	4,450
Jobskills[1]	1,611	2,000
Business Start Programme[2]	816	1,200
Job clubs	1,776	4,080

[1] Jobskills is a single integrated scheme which is being piloted in 2 areas in Northern Ireland and which may eventually replace both YTP and JTP.

[2] This scheme has replaced the Enterprise Allowance scheme.

Blind and Partially Sighted People

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what is his Department's policy on which information produced by his Department is published in alternative media to standard print such as Braille, tape or large print;

(2) what arrangements his Department makes to ensure that blind and partially sighted people have access to information produced by his Department where it has not been published in alternative media such as Braille, large print or tape.

Sir John Wheeler: The Northern Ireland Office is currently working on its policy regarding employment of people with disabilities. A code of practice on the "Employment of People with Disabilities in the Northern Ireland Civil Service (NICS)" was issued in August 1992 by the equal opportunities unit—EOU—to all Northern Ireland Departments. The code sets out the policy on the employment of people with disabilities, provides practical guidance on ways in which staff at all levels can help people with disabilities to participate fully in the work of the NICS and describes the special arrangements for the employment of staff who are registered disabled. The code lists the range of equipment which is available to assist people with a visual impairment: computer and Braille printer, computer and voice synthesiser, Braille jotter, computer enlarged text, tape recorder and personal reader service. In addition, a document brailling service is operated for those visually impaired civil servants who find it convenient to have documents in Braille for reference. While there is no overall policy in the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments for the publication of information in alternative media or on the access to information where it has not been published in alternative media, the following procedures are in place throughout the Northern Ireland Departments.

Department of Health and Social Services

When publishing any information, the choice of media used, including Braille, large print or tape, is made in relation to the nature of the message and the audience to be reached.

Department of Economic Development

Through the Training and Employment Agency's disablement advisory service, there is a wide range of services available. Contact with clients is on a personal one to one basis. All relevant information is also available either in Braille, on tape or large print. When a client requires information which is not already available in the medium most acceptable, it is provided within three to six days.

A tape on consumer rights has been produced by the General Consumer Council for NI in conjunction with the Blind Centre which has distributed it by way of the talking newspaper network.

The Local Enterprise Development Unit is in the process of producing a range of audio tapes which provide advice on key areas of business development which are accessible for the blind or partially sighted.

Department of the Environment

The roads service operates the 'orange badge' scheme which provides on-street parking concessions for registered blind people and those with severe mobility handicaps. In this connection, the roads service has arranged for the production of an audio tape which outlines details of the orange badge scheme for those who have difficulty in reading the explanatory leaflet. This tape is available on request from Disability Action and the Blind Centre for Northern Ireland.

The road safety education branch makes use of TV, radio and large posters in road safety campaigns. The Jordanstown schools for children with the auditory or visual handicaps are supplied with road safety teaching materials and are visited by the Department's road safety education officers, who liaise with teachers on the teaching of road safety to blind or partially sighted people.

Other areas of the Department, while not having a defined policy relating to the production of information in alternative media, give assistance as required to blind or partially sighted people. For examples, ratepayers/housing benefit claimants with impaired vision are given every assistance in understanding correspondence and completing forms. Where, appropriate, staff visit such persons in their own homes to assist them.

The water executive is currently in discussions with the Royal National Institute for the Blind to identify relevant information which could be produced in alternative media and stored centrally for access by registered sighted or blind persons.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the numbers of staff by grade that are employed in his Department and agencies in the automatic data processing functional specialism.

Health and Social Services

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he will carry out a review of the implementation of the Department of Health and Social Service's regional strategy for 1992 to 1997; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Implementation of the regional strategy is kept continuously under review by the health and personal social services management executive on behalf of the Department of Health and Social Services.

The management executive's annual management plan sets a number of interim objectives and targets for boards which are based on those in the regional strategy. The new management executive corporate monitoring information system is being used to track progress in achieving these.

Belfast Harbour

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will agree to meet the leaders of the stevedores working in the Belfast harbour to discuss the future of the Belfast harbour; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Provision has been made in the schedule to the draft Ports (Northern Ireland) Order relating to the transfer of employment rights and liabilities similar to that in the Ports Act 1991, which applies in the rest of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will hold urgent discussions with the chief executive of Belfast Harbour Commissioners and Scruttons Ltd. (Stevedores), to examine the terms and conditions being imposed on the Transport and General Workers Union dock labour force at Belfast harbour; and if he will make a statement on his findings.

Mr. Atkins: Terms and conditions for the dock labour force in Belfast are at present being discussed by representatives of the employers and their prospective employees. It would not be appropriate for me to intervene in these matters.

Rural Poverty

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he will take in order to combat the levels of rural poverty in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Wheeler: The Northern Ireland Housing Executive is tackling the problem of rural housing unfitness highlighted in the recently published 1991 house condition survey primarily through the housing grants scheme which is geared to direct most assistance to those in greatest need. The scheme includes provision for replacement grant and more generous financial assistance towards the installation of first-time services to meet the specific needs of rural dwellers.

The Department of Health and Social Services has provided a grant towards the administrative costs of the Northern Ireland Anti-Poverty Network since its establishment in 1991.

Social security in Northern Ireland maintains parity with the rest of the United Kingdom. There are no specific provisions for rural areas, but income-related benefits provide assistance to those in greatest need regardless of their location.

In addition, the rural development programme in Northern Ireland is encouraging the economic and social regeneration of the most disadvantaged rural areas. It aims to assist those who, as part of a broadly based community group, are seeking to develop plans for the regeneration of their areas. I am confident that the long-term benefits that will accrue from the programme will help to alleviate rural poverty through increased employment opportunities—direct jobs, both full time and part time, and the indirect spin-offs to the general locality that will follow—for example, increased visitors to an area through local tourism development; helping to stem the migration from rural to urban areas; building of self-confidence to remote communities through the community development process; improved access to training and development for both individuals and groups; improvement in local infrastructure and services.

The Rural Development Council is a key element of the programme and is playing an important role in promoting and supporting local community development and advising Government on issues affecting rural communities.

While the programme is at an early stage of implementation, I have been greatly encouraged by the progress made to date by the Department of Agriculture, RDC, and community groups across Northern Ireland.

Five multi-sectoral projects have been launched, representing substantial national, European Community, International Fund for Ireland and private funding commitment to rural areas of greatest need. A number of other projects are at the development stage.

Creggan to Glassdrummond Road, Armagh

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the accident history of the Creggan and Glassdrummond road, County Armagh; and if he will take steps to improve traffic safety on this road.

Mr. Atkins: Since 1986, three personal injury accidents have been reported. The Department proposes to improve traffic safety on the road by erecting signs and providing road markings at the Murray's road junction.

EC Assistance

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of all the successful and unsuccessful applications under the EC Leader and interregional co-operation—Interreg—programmes.

Sir John Wheeler: The information requested has been placed in the Library of the House. A total of 572 applications have been received under the Northern Ireland/Ireland Interreg programme. Of these, 265 have been successful, 281 unsuccessful and the remainder are still under consideration. Of the 61 applications considered under the Leader programme, four have been successful, 31 unsuccessful and the remainder are still under consideration.

Housing (Grants)

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many grant applications have been received by each office of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive under the Housing Order 1992; and how many are (a) approved, (b) rejected and (c) incomplete.

Mr. Atkins: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but the chief executive has advised me that the information requested is as follows:

Grants Office	Number of Applications

Note: 1,129 grant applications under the Order were subsequently withdrawn.

Camlough Lake, Armagh

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals there are to develop Camlough lake, in County Armagh, for (a) recreation or tourism, (b) electricity generation and (c) mains water supply.

Mr. Atkins: The recreation and tourism potential of Camlough lake has been considered as part of the South Armagh tourism study which will be published in the near future.

The use of Camlough lake in the generation and supply of electricity is primarily a matter for Northern Ireland Electricity plc. I am not, however, aware of any proposals.

The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland has a proposed programme of works with the aim of increasing abstraction from Camlough lake to supply future demands for the Newry area.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which bodies or organisations currently have responsibility for the land, waters and development of the Camlough lake area of County Armagh.

Mr. Atkins: The Camlough Waterworks Trustees and Northern Ireland Electricity plc own land around Camlough lake. Under the Water Act (Northern Ireland) 1972, the Department of the Environment has a duty to promote the conservation and cleanliness of water. Proposals for development are subject to the planning process.

Belfast International Airport

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what reports have been commissioned by the Northern Ireland Office concerning the viability of privatising Belfast international airport; if he will make them public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: A feasibility study on the privatisation of Belfast International Airport was commissioned from Hambros Bank Ltd in 1991; its final report is confidential to Government and is not available publicly.

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he intends to take to ensure the full protection of current contractual agreements and working conditions for all employees at Belfast international airport on its transfer to private ownership; what changes there will be to contractual agreements or working conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 will apply to the process of transferring Northern Ireland Airports Limited —NIAL—into private ownership. The employees of NIAL will therefore transfer to the successor company with the benefit of their terms and conditions of employment. On the sale of the shares of the successor company to private ownership employment contracts will be unaffected.

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many firefighters are employed at Belfast international airport; under whose specific control they currently operate; under whose specific control the airport fire service will operate after privatisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Fifty-six airport firefighters are employed at Belfast International Airport. They operate under the control of the airport company and that arrangement will continue after privatisation.

Selective Financial Assistance

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which industrial enterprises benefited from allocation of selective financial assistance in South Down from 1 April 1981 to 31 March 1992.

Mr. Atkins: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Electricity

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what reports he has received from the Director General of OFFER concerning his assessment of the imlementation of Northern Ireland Electricity in terms of prices, energy efficiency and standards of service.

Mr. Atkins: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Rural Planning Strategy

Mr. Coe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he intends to publish the new rural planning strategy and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The new strategy will be published in September. This follows a major consultation exercise commenced in August 1991 involving the publication of the leaflet "What Kind of Countryside Do We Want?", and a series of public meetings or "rural clinics" organised by the Rural Development Council, the Rural Community Network and Community Technical Aid at which the issues raised in the leaflet were discussed. The strategy document will outline the overall planning strategy and regional policies for the rural area, and will collate within one document planning guidance to all those interested in development in the rural area.

Post Office Robberies

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) pursuant to his answer of 19 July, Official Report, column 38, why the robbery which occurred at Toome street post office, Belfast, on 17 June was not included in his answer;

(2) if he will make a statement on a robbery which occurred at Toome street post office, Belfast, on 17 June; and if he will state the value of cash and other items stolen.

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 23 July 1993]: There is no post office at Toome street, Belfast. The hon. Member may have in mind the Royal Mail's main postal sorting office. This is located at Royal Mail house, Donegall quay, Belfast, but is known locally as Tomb street, where it has a service entrance. I understand that there was an incident involving the unauthorised removal of a number of registered packages from these premises on 17 June, but it is inappropriate for me to comment further as the matter is sub-judice.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Computers (Misuse)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers have been disciplined for misusing personal information from police computers in the last year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not held centrally.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is intending in relation to paragraph 3.6 of the Police Complaints Authority report 1992 concerning the continued misuse of the police national computer; whether the procedures, recommended by a report to Parliament and published by the authority in 1986—HC 425—have been implemented; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The arrangements for the protection of police national computer data against misuse by police officers are the responsibility of individual chief officers. The Association of Chief Police Officers published a code of practice for police computer systems in December 1987, in which the recommendations of the Police Complaints Authority report of 1986 were taken into account. The procedures for auditing use of the PNC are being considered further by ACPO in conjunction with the Home Office.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers have been prosecuted for misusing personal information from police computers in the last year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Court proceedings information held centrally under the Data Protection Act 1984 and Computer Misuse Act 1990 does not distinguish as to the employment or professional status of the offender.

Deer

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what assessment he has made of the behavioural pattern of roe deer in their formation of family groups between May and August; and what protection is afforded to families of roe deer during that period;

(2) what plans he has to review schedule 1 to the Deer Act 1991;

(3) what assessment he has made of the impact of the Deer Act 1991 on population figures for roe deer;

(4) what protection is afforded to (a) doe and (b) buck roe deer during the rutting season; and what assessment he has made as to whether the provisions are compatible with each other.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have received no evidence to suggest that the Act is not working effectively, nor that the close seasons set out in schedule 1 are in need of revision. I understand that the population of deer of all species is rising. Protection for doe roe deer runs from 1 March to 31 October, which thus includes the rutting season. No similar protection is afforded to bucks, for which the close season runs from 1 November to 31 March.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the public bodies for which he is responsible hold meetings in public; and if he will list them.

Mr. Howard: Three. These are as follows: Parliamentary Boundary Commission for England; Parliamentary Boundary Commission for Wales; Community Development Foundation.

Young Detainees

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the number of children and young people originating in Wales detained under section 53 sentences and kept in prison departments.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Elfyn Llwyd, dated July 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to write to you directly in reply to your Parliamentary Question about the number of children and young people originating in Wales detained under Section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 and kept in prison establishments.

The available information is for those detained under section 53 after sentencing by courts in Wales. The latest information is for 31 May 1993. On that date, there were 7 detainees aged between 15 and 17 and 4 detainees aged between 18 and 20 who were recorded as having received Section 53 sentences from courts in Wales.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many children and young people were detained under section 53 sentences in Wales in each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information is for those received into Prison Service establishments after sentences under Section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 from courts in Wales during the years 1989 to 1991. Figures for 1992 are not yet available. The details for those recorded as being received from Welsh courts are given in the table for the age bands 14 to 16 and 17 to 20. These figures do not cover those received into local authority care.

Year	Age at reception 14-16	17-20	Total
1989	5	1	6
1990	4	1	5
1991	2	1	3

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many juveniles and young adults from Wales were remanded in custody in (a) 1979, (b) 1984, (c) 1989 and (d) 1990.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Elfyn Llwyd, dated July 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to write to you directly in reply to your Parliamentary Question about remands in custody of juveniles and young adults from Wales in (a) 1979, (b) 1984, (c) 1989 and (d) 1990.

The available information is for prison receptions of remands into custody from courts in Wales during the years 1989 and 1990. This is given in the attached table, with separate figures for first reception as untried and first reception as convicted unsentenced for each of the age bands 14 to 16 and 17 to 20.

Merseyside Fire and Civil Defence Authority

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking following the recent inspection of the Merseyside fire and civil defence authority in respect of the financial provision for the authority for the remainder of 1993-94, and therefore in subsequent years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Her Majesty's inspector of fire services is preparing the report of the special inspection of the Merseyside fire brigade which he conducted during the week beginning 5 July. I shall want to consider the implications of the report carefully once it has been completed.

Hypnotics

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice he has recently received from his Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs concerning hypnotics; what conclusions he has reached in the light of any such advice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs has recently considered the misuse of the hypnotic temazepam. In November 1992 the Council recommended in principle that temazepam should be rescheduled from schedule 4 to schedule 3 to the Misuse of Drugs Regulations 1985, a stricter regime of control.

The Home Office subsequently carried out a public consultation exercise on this proposal. The advisory council has now considered the responses to this consultation, and we are currently studying its conclusions.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to remove the right of access under the Data Protection Act 1984 to computerised personnel and immigration records held as personal data; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement in relation to progress being made towards agreement on the proposed European Commission directive on data protection; and in which areas there is still disagreement between member states.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to a question from him on 31 March at column 220. The Council working party has concluded its initial consideration of the revised text of the draft directive. It has started a second reading, on the basis of a text containing amendments proposed by the Belgian presidency.

Racial Equality

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints were received by the Commission for Racial Equality from and on behalf of children and young people aged 18 years or under in each year since 1987; and how many of them related to (a) racial harassment, (b) school exclusions, (c) school admissions and (d) transracial fostering adoption.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Life Prisoners

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average sentence actually served by (a) men and (b) women sentenced to life imprisonment.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: According to the records held centrally, which are approximate, the average time served under sentence in Prison Service establishments by life sentenced prisoners first released on licence in 1992 was 13·2 years for males and 12·6 years for females. These figures are provisional and may be subject to revision at a later date.

Figures are published annually, but not split by sex, in "Prison Statistics England and Wales", table 8.5 of the volume for 1991, Cm 2157.

Knives

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to increase the sentences for those convicted of carrying a knife in public without good reason; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The maximum penalty for the offence of carrying a knife in public without good reason is a level 3 fine—currently £1,000. In appropriate circumstances, a person may be charged with carrying an offensive weapon in public without good reason. This offence carries a maximum penalty of two years imprisonment and/or an unlimited fine.

The penalties for these offences are kept under review, but we have no present plans to invite Parliament to increase them.

Passports

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what considerations govern the number of sub-post offices permitted to handle passport applications.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the chief executive of the Passport Agency, whom I have asked to reply.

Letter from John Hayzelden to Mrs. Anne Campbell, dated 26 July 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me, as the chief executive of the Passport Agency, to write to you in reply to your Parliamentary Question about passports.

The UK Passport Agency has a contract with Post Office Counters Ltd (POCL) under which they issue British Visitor's Passports (BVPs) and stock application forms for standard British passports. BVPs are issued only at Crown Post Offices in England, Wales and Scotland and at sub-Post Offices that were previously Crown Post Offices and at certain designated sub-Post Offices at ports and airports. By restricting the issue of BVPs to these offices, we can ensure close control over the issuing arrangements and the security of blank BVPs.

Application forms for standard passports (for issue at one of the Passport Offices located at Belfast, Glasgow, Liverpool, London, Newport and Peterborough) are available at the same Post Offices as those that issue BVPs. This means that the application forms are available at some 1,500 Post Offices in total, as well as at travel agents and Passport Offices. In deciding whether to extend the current range of outlets for passport application forms, we have to balance cost against customer need. Our surveys indicate that at present some 93 per cent. of passport applicants find our forms very easy or fairly easy to obtain, but we shall keep the matter under continuous review.

Murder (Life Sentences)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison inmates in England and Wales were serving a life sentence for murder as of 16 July.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated July 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to write to you directly in reply to your Parliamentary Question about the population of prisoners serving a life sentence for murder.

The latest available information is for 31 May 1993 when there were 2,520 prisoners in Prison Service establishments serving mandatory life sentences for murder.

Juvenile Offenders

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what studies have been considered by his Department concerning any relationship between juvenile offenders and (a) employment and qualifications, (b) school attendance records, (c) statemented pupil status, (d) earlier reference to educational support services, consequent on known behaviour and (e) any other pattern of undesirable conduct for which remedies were likely to be available directly of indirectly from public funds.

Mr. Maclean: Home Office research study 96 "Schools, Disruptive Behaviour and Delinquency", published in 1988 is a comprehensive review of research in this area. The Home Office research and planning unit is continuing to monitor relevant research findings.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the use by the courts of residence requirements when supervision orders are imposed on juvenile offenders.

Mr. Maclean: The Government are committed to ensuring that courts have the powers they need to deal effectively with offenders. The Children Act 1989 conferred upon courts a power to attach a residence requirement to supervision orders. This power came into force in October 1991. The guidance issued under the Children Act made it clear that this requirement is intended to be available for a repeat offender who has committed a serious offence and whose criminal behaviour is attributable to the circumstances in which he is living. No information is yet available on the extent of its use.

Settlement

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of those who have been granted exceptional leave have gained settlement in each of the last five years.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on persons accepted for settlement under exceptional leave arrangements in the years 1988-92 is given in table 1.1 of Home Office statistical bulletin issue 19/93 "Asylum Statistics, United Kingdom 1992", a copy of which is in the Library. Information on persons previously granted exceptional leave who were subsequently accepted for settlement on another basis is not readily available.

Asylum

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have applied for asylum in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years; and of these how many have been granted full asylum and how many have been removed or otherwise left the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on applications for, and grants of, asylum in the United Kingdom in the years 1988-92 is given in table 1.1 of Home Office statistical bulletin issue 19/93 "Asylum Statistics, United Kingdom 1992", a copy of which is in the Library. Available information for 1992 on removals and voluntary departures of asylum seekers is given in table 9.1 of the bulletin. Corresponding information for years prior to 1992 is not available.

Deportation

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many cases during the last 12 months a deportation order has been signed by the Home Secretary but removal not affected due to the provisions of EC legislation.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Where it is decided not to effect the removal of someone who is the subject of a deportation order, normal practice is to revoke the order. There have been no revocations in the last 12 months arising from the application of EC law.

Working Holidaymakers

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been granted working holidaymaker status in each of the last five years; if he will give the breakdown by nationality; how many people granted holidaymaker status in each of the last five years did not leave the United Kingdom at the end of their conditions; and on what basis they sought to remain.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Reliable data on admissions of working holidaymakers are available only from 1 May 1990, and were given in the reply to a question from the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 14 June at columns 449-50. I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible with the available after-entry data on working holidaymakers.

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many visitors were admitted to the United Kingdom, during the last full year for which such figures are available as working holidaymakers; and from which countries of origin they came.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 14 June at columns 449-50.

Retired Firefighters

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will meet representatives from the National Association of Retired Firefighters to discuss their participation at the remembrance ceremony at the cenotaph; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations he has received regarding ex-fire service personnel taking part in the remembrance ceremony at the cenotaph; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We have received two letters from the association's national secretary asking whether representatives of the association might take part in the ceremony. The civilian services contingent is made up of serving representatives of the civilian services. My right hon. and learned Friend would consider sympathetically any request from the association for a meeting, but I can hold out no hope of being able to extend membership of the contingent to retired personnel.

EC Work Seekers

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what test is applied to European Community national work seekers in receipt of income support for over six months following the amendment to regulation 21(3) of the Income Support (General) Regulations 1977, introduced on 12 April;

(2) what action will be taken by his Department if income support is still in payment after six months to a European Community national considered not to have a genuine chance of finding work by the Employment Service.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Where a European Community national has been seeking work here for over six months and is in receipt of income support, his position is reviewed, taking into account any relevant information including an assessment from the Employment Service, of the person's work seeking activities and chances of finding work. If the European Community national is considered not to have any right, under EC law, to remain here, he is informed that he is no longer lawfully present and that he should leave the United Kingdom. He is then no longer eligible for the payment of income support.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what practical distinction he makes in considering whether nationals of other EC countries in receipt of income support are lawfully present in the United Kingdom between the tests of (a) a genuine chance of finding work or (b) a reasonable chance or opportunity of finding work.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In deciding whether a European Community national who is in receipt of income support is lawfully present in the United Kingdom, the criteria established by the European Court of Justice judgment of 26 February 1991 in the case of Antonissen—case C 292/89—are applied. These have the effect that the person must show, among other matters, that he has "genuine chances of being engaged".

Police (Encrypted Radios)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on the provision of encrypted radios for Gloucestershire constabulary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We have had discussions with Gloucestershire constabulary regarding the use of encrypted radios by police forces. They were advised of the recommendations by the Association of Chief Police Officers on this matter, which the Home Office endorses.

Asylum and Immigration

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers and immigration detainees have committed acts of deliberate self-harm in the last 12 months in United Kingdom prisons and detention centres.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Between 1 June 1992 and 31 May 1993, four immigration detainees, including asylum seekers, committed acts of self-harm while detained in immigration detention centres. The immigration status of those detained in prison who committed acts of deliberate self-harm is not known.

Terrorists

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners serving sentences in British prisons for terrorist offences have been transferred to prisons in Northern Ireland; how many of them are men and how many are women; and how many cases are pending.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is given in the table.

Prisoners transferred from Great Britain to Northern Ireland following conviction for terrorist offences and requests for such transfer outstanding.

Mrs. Fiona Jones

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will raise within the Trevi group the question of the sentence on the murderer of the English school teacher, Mrs. Fiona Jones.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Trevi is a forum for intergovernmental police co-operation between the member states of the European Community and does not discuss judicial matters. Sentencing remains a matter for each member state—in this case, France.

Police Radio Service

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the recommendations of the review into the police radio service will be introduced; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Work is now in hand to translate the recommendations of the review of radio communications in the police and fire services into detailed implementation proposals. The present plan is for the new radio systems to be available for use by the police and fire services from 1998.

Merseyside Fire and Civil Defence Authority

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received in respect of the re-inspection of the Merseyside fire and civil defence authority; and if he will now make the report on that re-inspection public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a letter on behalf of hon. Members seeking a meeting to discuss matters relating to the special inspection of the Merseyside fire brigade which took place during the week beginning 5 July. We shall reply to those representations as soon as possible.

Drugs Education

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish a formal response to the report of the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs on drugs education in schools.

Mr. Maclean: We are now studying the report "Drug Education in Schools: the Need for a New Impetus", which was published on 28 June. We shall respond to the chairman of the advisory council with our views on the report in due course.

Secure Accommodation

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on provisions under the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 which give powers to the courts to detain under 16-year-olds in secure accommodation and the use to which these powers have been put in the past 15 years.

Mr. Maclean: The Children and Young Persons Act 1933 allows the Crown court, inter alia, to order that 10 to 13-year-olds who have been convicted of murder or manslaughter and 14 to 15-year-olds who have been convicted of murder or manslaughter or other grave crimes which in the case of an adult would carry a sentence of 14 years or more, should be detained in a place to be determined by the Secretary of State for periods not exceeding the maximum period of imprisonment which could be imposed on an adult for those offences.

The Government are currently reviewing the adequacy of these provisions. Offenders in this age group may be detained, if the Secretary of State so decides, in secure accommodation managed either by local authorities, or by the youth treatment service or by the Prison Service. Information, available only for years since 1979, relating to the detention of 10 to 15-year-olds under section 53 after conviction for specific offences is given in the table.

Mandatory Life Sentences

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he intends to implement the House of Lords judgment in R. v Secretary of State for the Home Department ex parte Smart, Pegg, Doody and Pierson, given on 24 June.

Mr. Howard: The current procedures governing the release of persons convicted of murder and sentenced to mandatory life imprisonment are described in statements made in 1983 and 1987 by two of my predecessors as Secretary of State, the right hon. Sir Leon Brittan and my right hon. Friend the Member for Witney (Mr. Hurd) respectively.

Under those procedures, shortly after a person has received a mandatory life sentence, the Secretary of State invites the judiciary to give its views on the period to be served to satisfy the requirements of retribution and deterrence. The judiciary's views presently comprise the advice of the trial judge and the Lord Chief Justice. Their advice is one factor among others which the Secretary of State considers before he sets the date for the first review by the Parole Board of the case for releasing the prisoner on licence.

This review is timed to take place three years before the expiry of the minimum period which the Secretary of State considers necessary to satisfy the requirements of retribution and deterrence or, where that period is 20 years or more, 17 years after sentence.

At present, a prisoner is not told the contents of the judicial recommendation, nor the length of the period which the Secretary of State has determined to be the minimum necessary to satisfy the requirements of retribution and deterrence. However, where the period so determined is less than 20 years, the prisoner can deduce its length by adding three years to the date which he is given for his first review; and where it is 20 years, he can deduce its length from the terms of the notice informing him that his first review will take place 17 years after sentence. But where the period is more than 20 years, the prisoner is not able to establish its total length.

The House of Lords judgment requires me to inform the prisoner of the recommendations made by the judiciary as to the period necessary to satisfy the requirements of retribution and deterrence and of the substance of any opinions expressed by the judiciary which are relevant to my decision as to the appropriate minimum period to be served to satisfy those requirements. In addition, I am required to afford the prisoner the opportunity to submit written representations. Although I am not required to adopt the judicial advice, I must give reasons where I or a Minister acting under my authority decides to depart from it.

I propose to give effect to this judgment by informing all persons who are now serving a mandatory life sentence and any persons who may subsequently be so sentenced, as soon as is reasonably practicable, of the substance of the judicial recommendations which were made in their case as to the period to be served by them in order to satisfy the requirements of retribution and deterrence. I am consulting the Lord Chief Justice about the precise way in which this will be done.

In addition, I have decided to disclose to both existing and future mandatory life sentence prisoners the Secretary of State's decision, taken after consideration of the judicial advice, on the appropriate period in question.

In accordance with the judgment, reasons will be given to the prisoner for any departure from the judicial view.

As the judgment makes clear, successive Secretaries of State have been, and I continue to be, willing to consider any written representations by prisoners as to the minimum period to be served by them to satisfy the requirements of retribution and deterrence. In future, prisoners will be afforded the opportunity to submit such written representations at the beginning of the sentence and before I have formed a view as to the minimum period for retribution and deterrence.

I take this opportunity to emphasise that the view which I or a Minister acting under my authority takes, at the beginning of a mandatory life sentence, of the period necessary to satisfy the requirements of retribution and deterrence is an initial view of the minimum period necessary to satisfy those requirements. It therefore remains possible for me, or a future Secretary of State, exceptionally to revise that view of the minimum period, either by reducing it, or by increasing it where I, or a successor in my office, concludes that, putting aside questions of risk, the minimum requirements of retribution and deterrence will not have been satisfied at the expiry of the period which had previously been determined.

Before taking a decision to increase this minimum period, the Secretary of State would inform the prisoner that he was minded to take this action and afford him the opportunity to submit written representations as to why the period should not be increased. Any such representations would then be taken into account before any new decision was made. If it were decided to increase the period in question, the prisoner would be informed of the length of the new period and given the reasons for the increase.

Finally, I wish to state that a mandatory life sentence prisoner should not assume that once the minimum period fixed for retribution and deterrence has been satisfied he will necessarily be released if it is considered that he is no longer a risk. In this respect, the position of a prisoner subject to a mandatory life sentence is to be contrasted with that of a prisoner serving a discretionary life sentence. As the then Minister of State, my right hon. Friend the Member for Mitcham and Morden (Dame A. Rumbold), stated in the House on 16 July 1991 during debates on the Criminal Justice Bill:

"In a discretionary case, the decision on release is based purely on whether the offender continues to be a risk to the public. The presumption is that once the period that is appropriate to punishment has passed, the prisoner should be released if it is safe to do so. The nature of the mandatory sentence is different. The element of risk is not the decisive factor in handing down a life sentence. According to the judicial process, the offender has committed a crime of such gravity that he forfeits his liberty to the State for the rest of his days—if necessary, he can be detained for life without the necessity for subsequent judicial intervention. The presumption is, therefore, that the offender should remain in custody until and unless the Home Secretary concludes that the public interest would be better served by the prisoner's release than by his continued detention. In exercising his continued discretion in that respect, the Home Secretary must take account, not just of the question of risk, but of how society as a whole would view the prisoner's release at that juncture. The Home Secretary take account of the judicial recommendation, but the final decision is his."—[Official Report, 16 July 1991; Vol. 193, c. 311-12.]

I wish to make it clear that, in so far as the judgment of the House of Lords considered that there was inconsistency between the practice established by Sir Leon Brittan in 1983 and that statement by my right hon. Friend, I wholly endorse the latter as a desciption of the way in which I currently exercise my discretion to release mandatory life sentence prisoners and intend to do so in future.

Accordingly, before any such prisoner is released on licence, I will consider not only (a) whether the period served by the prisoner is adequate to satisfy the requirements of retribution and deterrence and (b) whether it is safe to release the prisoner, but also (c) the public acceptability of early release. This means that I will exercise my discretion to release only if I am satisfied that to do so will not threaten the maintenance of public confidence in the system of criminal justice.

Everything that I have said about the practice of the Secretary of State in relation to mandatory life sentence prisoners applies equally to persons who are, or will be, detained during Her Majesty's pleasure under section 53(1) of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933, as well as to persons who have been, or will be, sentenced to custody for life under section 8 of the Criminal Justice Act 1982.

Forensic Science Service

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will lay before Parliament the annual report for the Forensic Science Service; and if he will make a statement about the financial targets this year.

Mr. Howard: I have today laid before Parliament copies of the Forensic Science Service's annual report and accounts for 1992-93.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Rushcliffe (Mr. Clarke) announced on 4 May at column 72 financial and service level targets for the Forensic Science Service for 1993-94 based on a forecast outturn for 1992-93. On the basis of the audited outturn for 1992-93, the unit cost efficiency target has been revised from 1·6 per cent. to 1·8 per cent. The other performance targets remain the same.

Channel Tunnel

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how the criminal injuries compensation scheme will apply to the channel tunnel.

Mr. Howard: The British part of the channel tunnel —that is to say, the land comprising the tunnel system as far as the frontier at the mid-point of the tunnel—is part of Great Britain by virtue of section 10 of the Channel Tunnel Act 1987. Subject to certain exceptions explained in this answer, blameless victims of crimes of violence in that part of the tunnel system will accordingly be eligible to apply for compensation under the criminal injuries compensaton scheme in the normal way.

However, article 30(1) of schedule 2 to the Channel Tunnel (International Arrangements) Order 1993 provides that claims for compensation for injury caused by or to officers of the adjoining state in the exercise of their functions in the host state shall be subject to the law and jurisdiction of the adjoining state as if the circumstances giving rise to the claim had occurred in that state. This means that the scheme will cover injuries caused by or to United Kingdom officers anywhere in the tunnel system or control zones, but not injuries caused by or to foreign officers. Claims for injury caused to or by foreign officers must accordingly be made against the officer's country.

In order to ensure that the scheme reflects these provisions I am amending it by the insertion of new paragraphs 4A and 28A, which read as follows:

"4A. The Board will entertain applications under paragraph 4 arising from injury or death caused by or to officers of the United Kingdom—but not of any other state —in the exercise of their functions in the Channel Tunnel or control zones, within the meaning of the Channel Tunnel (International Arrangements) Order 1993."

"28A. Paragraph 4A will take effect from the date the Channel Tunnel (International Arrangements) Order 1993 comes into force."

The order is expected to come into force on 2 August 1993.

Police Complaints Authority

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new appointments have been made to the Police Complaints Authority.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Anthony Williams MBE and Mr. Linbert Spencer have accepted my predecessor's invitation to serve as members of the Police Complaints Authority. Mr. Williams has retired from the Army with the rank of Lieutenant Colonel, and Mr. Spencer is an employment consultant. Mr. Williams and Mr. Spencer will serve for three years, from 24 June 1993 and 26 July 1993 respectively.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the number of complaints received by the Police Complaints Authority from and on behalf of children and young people aged under 18 years.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Responsibility for recording complaints against the police rests with the chief officer of the force concerned. Statistics collected centrally do not show the age of complainants but chief officers have been asked to supply this information from this year.

Returning Residents

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people, by nationality, have requested entry to the United Kingdom as returning residents, in each quarter since April 1992; and how many have been (a) readmitted as such, (b) readmitted for a limited period and (c) refused entry to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 26 July 1993]: The available information is given in the tables. Information is not available on persons seeking admission as returning residents who were found not to satisfy the relevant requirements of the immigration rules but who were admitted for a limited period under another category.

Immigration

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many nationals of (a) Jamaica, (b) Turkey, (c) Morocco, (d) the USA, (e) Australia, (f) Malaysia, (g) Hong Kong, (h) Guyana, (i) Trinidad, (j) Colombia and (k) Algeria were (i) granted and (ii) refused permission to enter the United Kingdom at ports of entry in each quarter since January 1992, and in total, to the latest available date.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 26 July 1993]: The information requested for 1992 is given in the table; corresponding data for the first two quarters of 1993 are not available.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were detained under Immigration Act powers (a) overnight, (b) between one night and one month and (c) for a period of more than one month in (i) Harmondsworth detention centre, (ii) the Queen's building in Heathrow, (iii) terminal 4, Heathrow, (iv) the Beehive, Gatwick, (v) HM prison Haslar, (vi) HM prison Pentonville and (vii) any other establishments, by name, during (a) 1992 and (b) 1993 up to the latest convenient date; and of these people, how many in each category were (1) women, (2) children aged under 18 years and (3) men.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 26 July 1993]: The available information is given in the table. The other information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the arrangements for inspecting marked registers after elections so as to allow such inspection to take place in the electoral area in question rather than in London.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This matter is currently being considered as part of our post-election review.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Sustainable Development

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make it his policy to introduce proposals for a Select Committee on Sustainable Development.

Mr. Newton: I have no plans to do so. However, the hon. Member will no doubt welcome the United Kingdom strategy for sustainable development consultation paper which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment launched last week, and may wish to contribute his views.

House Committees

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Lord President of the Council what Committees of the House other than Standing Committees have members of the Government as members; and if he will name the Committees and the hon. Members concerned.

Mr. Newton: The details requested are as follows:

Committees	Members
Accommodation and Works Committee:	Mr. David Lightbown
Administration Committee:	Mr. Sydney Chapman
Broadcasting Committee:	Mr. Greg Knight Mr. Tony Newton
Finance and Services Committee:	Mr. Greg Knight Mr. Tony Newton
Procedure Committee:	Mr. Andrew MacKay
Public Accounts Committee:	Mr. Stephen Dorrell

Boundaries

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee if he will list the current boundaries of the precincts of the House; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ray Powell: A map of the parliamentary estate is contained in section 2 of the Members' handbook. Large-scale drawings delineating the precise boundaries of the precincts of the House are held by the Parliamentary Works Directorate.

Staff Manning Levels

Mr. Cox: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what discussions are now taking place and with whom as to possible reductions of staff manning levels in any building in which Members of Parliament or their staff have offices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Beith: Following the decision by the House of Commons Commission on 5 July to implement a revised complement for the office keeper and attendants' staff in the Serjeant at Arms' Department, members of the union branch committee of NUCPS and staff have been briefed on the changes. The staff inspector will review the operation of the new proposals after they have been in force for 12 months. Such a review will enable the Commission to be satisfied that the new grading levels are appropriate, that the wider use of information technology has been achieved without undue difficulty, and that the new staff complements provide a satisfactory level of service to Members and their staff.

The various staff changes will not be implemented until after the House returns in October. I understand that all the office keeper and attendant staff will be informed of their new locations of work before the House rises and that training is being arranged for any new duties to be undertaken.

Parliamentary Buildings

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what additional facilities have been requested by hon. Members in each of the parliamentary buildings where hon. Members and staff now have offices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ray Powell: Details of facilities available to Members are contained in the leaflet "Accommodation and General Facilities for Members, their Private Secretaries and Research Assistants". That leaflet is reprinted in the Members' handbook and is available from the Serjeant at Arms office and the special leaflet racks.

Requests for additional facilities are received regularly from Members, and those requests that cannot be provided on a routine basis are referred to the relevant domestic Select Committee for further consideration.

If my hon. Friend has any particular issue in mind, he should, in the first instant contact the Serjeant at Arms or relevant head of department.

Amar Appeal

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Amar Appeal to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 15 to 19 November.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those countries that have received advice and assistance on privatisation, contracting out and next steps style reforms under the know-how fund and other aid sources, and the cost in each case.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Most of the assistance provided overseas on privatisation has been to countries in east and central Europe and the former Soviet Union. Figures for individual countries since the launch of the know-how funds, including outstanding commitments, are:

	£'000
Poland	5,211
Romania	1,783
Hungary	4,424
Bulgaria	430
Former Czechoslovak Federation	4,800
Czech. Republic.	200
Slovak Republic.	500
Estonia	371
Latvia	200
Lithuania	11
Russia	2,335
Ukraine	355

Consultancy, advisory and twinning assistance has also been provided to developing countries but on a much smaller scale. Recent examples include Tanzania, Zambia, Guyana and Jamaica. Detailed expenditure figures are not readily available.

Advice on contracting out and next steps style reforms is usually part of a broader agenda of civil service and local government reform. The know-how funds are providing or developing assistance to central Government reform in Poland, Hungary, Albania and Ukraine and to local government in Poland, Hungary, the Czech Republic, the Slovak Republic, Bulgaria and Romania. Among developing countries, civil service or local government reforms have been or are of particular importance in the Gambia, Ghana, Grenada, Guyana, Indonesia, Jamaica, Uganda and Zambia while reform of individual institutions forms a part of most significant aid programmes. It is not possible to identify the elements of these programmes which relate specifically to contracting out and next steps style reforms.

World Development Conference

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent world development report, "Investing in Health" and on the visit of the Minister for Overseas Development to the world development conference in Liverpool.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We welcome this comprehensive and stimulating report and agree with its central thesis that a major proportion of the global burden of ill health could be prevented or inexpensively treated through cost-effective health care interventions. We endorse its concern about the huge burden of disease suffered by Africa.

At the Liverpool school of tropical medicine on 23 July, my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development delivered a speech entitled "The Challenge for Investors in Health: ODA's Perspective". She referred to two important challenges n the report: how can Governments and donors (i) provide more resources for health care and (ii) concentrate resources on cost-effective health care. She explained that ODA's health and population assistance is addressing these challenges by (i) helping to develop and refine health technologies, (ii) helping countries establish the systems needed to deliver health care technologies and (iii) encouraging reallocation of resources for health care, so that investments lead to real health improvements for the greatest number of people. We have placed a copy of her speech in the Libraries of the House.

Malawi

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for restoring financial aid to Malawi.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Progress on political and economic reform since the referendum has been encouraging. We have told President Banda that we plan to resume balance of payments aid in September and that we will be reviewing other aspects of our aid programme to Malawi at about that time. We will continue to follow closely the course of political and economic events in Malawi and this will continue to influence our aid programme.

Environmental Consultancies

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the names of the environmental consultancies engaged by the Overseas Development Administration for the last five years and provide, in each case, the number of projects for which environmental impact assessments have been prepared and the total value of contracts awarded.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 13 July 1993]: A list of the 69 environmental consultancies engaged over the last five years at a total cost of about £9·4 million has been placed in the Libraries of the House.

In line with the environmental appraisal process set out in the ODA manual of environmental appraisal, full environmental impact assessments—EIAs—are undertaken only on projects where earlier examination indicates this is required. EIA is a process rather than a single event. ODA's work in this area can often involve assessing the quality and comprehensiveness of EIAs completed by developing countries or other donors, and strengthening them by additional EIA inputs in line with the manual.

ODA's central financial records show that over the last five years we have contributed to 10 EIA assessments using outside environmental consultancies at a cost of about £2·8 million. These are included in the list referred to earlier in my answer.

ODA central financial records do not, however, cover those environmental assessment and monitoring activities undertaken by in-house advisers and which cover, at the appropriate stage, most of the projects under consideration by ODA.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Bank of England

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the sections of the Banking Act 1987 under which the Bank of England is specifically required to owe a duty of care to the bank depositors.

Mr. Nelson: The Banking Act 1987 does not impose such a duty upon the Bank of England.

VAT

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, further to the oral statement by the Paymaster General in the Standing Committee on the Finance Bill on 8 June on the mitigation of VAT penalties, what are the other factors that must be taken into account for mitigation to be permissible on the basis of the excluded circumstances; how he will ensure that Customs exercise their discretion in mitigating the VAT penalty; whether guidelines will be published for the information of the taxpayer; and what measures he will take to ensure that the policy is being applied consistently between tax offices.

Sir John Cope: From Royal Assent to the Finance Bill, restrictions on customs' existing power of mitigation in cases involving dishonesty will be removed and the discretion to mitigate extended to misdeclaration penalties. The essence of such a discretion is that each case is examined on its merits and customs cannot be prescriptive. All the circumstances leading to a penalty will be considered. The only constraints are the three factors excluded by law, if they are the sole criteria. These constraints are necessary in order to maintain the integrity of the penalty regime.

Customs will issue guidelines in public notices now being prepared. The use of the mitigation will be subject to customs' normal management controls. The mitigation is also subject to review by the independent VAT tribunal.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes are proposed to the payments on accounts scheme for VAT.

Sir John Cope: As announced at the time of the Budget in March, my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor now proposes that both the qualifying year for establishing inclusion in the scheme, and the reference year for establishing the level of payments, should be rolled forward to the most recent year for which details are available, 1992-93. This ensures that the scheme remains as fair as possible by using the most up-to-date information on the tax liability of businesses.

A statutory instrument—the VAT (Payments on Accounts) Order 1993—will shortly be laid before the House to give effect to this and other changes from 2 September 1993. In the interest of equity, the order makes provision to bring new businesses and existing businesses immediately into the scheme, where such businesses have an annual VAT liability exceeding £2 million. It provides for increased payments where the VAT liability of a business increases to certain levels. It also allows a business to come out of the scheme where the latest year's liability is less than £1·6 million.

Eco-tax

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to introduce an eco-tax in order to discourage unnecessary packaging.

Sir John Cope: My right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has no such plans.

Tax Returns

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the 10 countries which are most frequently given as the place of ordinary residence by those completing Inland Revenue tax returns 12 FR for the most recent year available, stating in each case the approximate number of taxpayers giving each country as their place of residence.

Mr. Dorrell: No records of this information are available.

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the tax districts which deal with completed 11K tax returns.

Mr. Dorrell: Most tax districts issue and deal with 11K tax returns, but especially those offices dealing with the PAYE of foreign workers assigned to the United Kingdom.

Gross National Product

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the United Kingdom gross national product for each of the next five years.

Mr. Nelson: Projections of gross domestic product growth for the financial years up to and including 1997-98 were published in table 2.2 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report". A copy is available in the Library.

Single Person Households

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will take steps to ensure that there is effective co-ordination of the impact on single person households of national taxation, local government taxation, and the various systems used for charging for public utilities.

Mr. Portillo: The Government take all relevant factors into account in making decisions on the level and structure of national taxation and on the local authority settlement. Council tax bills are set by local authorities, but legislation provides for a discount of 25 per cent. for single person households and for the payment of council tax benefit to those in need. Systems of charging for utilities are of course a matter for the private companies which now run them, subject to regulation by the appropriate regulatory body.

Economy

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received from the CBI over the state of the economy.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I regularly receive representations from the CBI and other organisations representing the views of United Kingdom industrialists on the state of the economy.

Disabled People

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to meet representatives of (a) the Disabled Living Foundation, (b) the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation, (c) the Keep Able Foundation and (d) Dial UK concerning the removal of VAT exemption from products designed for disabled people.

Sir John Cope: I regret that it has not been possible to provide a substantive answer before the summer recess. I shall write to the hon. Member shortly and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the types of products designed for disabled people which have been removed from VAT exemptions since April 1992.

Sir John Cope: None.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many of the public bodies for which he is responsible hold meetings in public; and if he will list them.

Mr. Portillo: Of the public bodies for which my right hon. and learned Friend is responsible, the Financial Services Tribunal may hold hearings in public if applicants so request. None of the other public bodies for which he is responsible holds meetings in public.

11 Downing Street

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 16 July, Official Report, column 700, what was the final destination of the carpet that was replaced on the second floor of No. 11 Downing street.

Sir John Cope: The old carpet was relaid elsewhere in 11 Downing street in 1991.

Football

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue is received per year from football and football pools.

Sir John Cope: The amount raised from pool betting duty in 1992-93 was £318 million. It is estimated that VAT on gate receipts and season tickets raises about £30 million each year.

Personal Debt

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the current level of personal debt in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nelson: The estimated financial liabilities of the personal sector at end-December 1992 were £488·2 billion. Details of the composition of this figure can be found in table 14·8 of the July 1993 edition of "Financial Statistics" or on the Central Statistical Office database; both sources are available in the Library.

Unemployment

Ms Short: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to implement the G7 agreement to give priority to reducing unemployment.

Mr. Nelson: The economic declaration from the Tokyo summit affirmed the implementation of stable macro-economic policies to promote non-inflationary sustainable growth and structural reforms to make markets—especially the labour market—work better. Such policies are the surest way or reducing unemployment over the medium term and are the heart of this Government's economic policy.

Expenditure

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the percentage real-terms increase or decrease in expenditure between 1979-80 outturn and 1993-94 estimated outturn in respect of (a) overall public expenditure, (b) defence, (c) social security, (d) health and (e) education.

Mr. Portillo: The percentage change in real terms between 1979-80 and 1992-93—the latest year for which detailed figures are available—is 23 per cent. for general Government expenditure, excluding privatisation proceeds, 5 per cent. for defence, 63 per cent. for social security, 53 per cent. for health and 27 per cent. for education.

Commission Disclosure

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the submissions he has received in respect of the Office of Fair Trading report on commission disclosure in respect of independent financial advisers and direct sale forces in the insurance industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) on 22 July 1993 at columns 296-300.

The Treasury has received some 800 written responses from all sectors of the industry, almost all of which have included representations about commission disclosure.

Carbon Emissions

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on the use of taxation policy to reduce carbon emissions to the levels recommended by the evaluation carried out by the Meteorological Office.

Sir John Cope: The Government's policy to ensure that the United Kingdom meets its commitments in the climate change convention, signed at Rio in June 1992, is set out in the answer that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment gave in reply to a written question from my hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point (Dr. Spink) on 26 July 1993, at columns 709-10. This refers to the taxation measures announced in the March budget to increase the price of energy in the domestic and transport sectors.

Inland Revenue

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will make it his policy to make a statement to Parliament where any bids from Inland Revenue staff are not considered in the market testing or privatisation of any work which is currently undertaken by the Inland Revenue; and if he will make a statement on his policy with respect to Inland Revenue bids.

(2) whether he will ensure that no confidential information or tax returns are held in other countries under the arrangements for Inland Revenue work to be undertaken by private companies;

(3) whether there are any restrictions as to the location in (a) the Republic of Ireland, (b) the United States of America or (c) elsewhere of companies allowed to bid under the arrangements for market testing or privatisation for work which is currently undertaken by the Inland Revenue.

Mr. Dorrell: I regret that it has not been possible to provide a substantive answer before the summer recess. I shall write to the hon. Member shortly and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Tobacco

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates he has made of the revenue lost to excise evasion on (a) hand-rolling tobacco and (b) cigarettes since the abolition of European fiscal frontiers; and how much of this revenue has been recovered so far.

Sir John Cope: Total revenue involved for single market excise offence cases involving hand-rolling tobacco to 30 June is £527,900 and for cigarettes £36,874. The amount recovered will depend on court cases, most of which are still pending. No reliable estimates of undetected evasion are available.

Tax Returns

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether any offence involving the unauthorised disclosure of information from tax returns is subject to prosecution under the Finance Act 1989 if the offence is committed in another country; and whether a prosecution would take place in the United Kingdom or the country where the offence is committed.

Mr. Dorrell: I regret that it has not been possible to provide a substantive answer before the summer recess. I shall write to the hon. Member shortly and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the average gross income from interest, dividends, trust income and annuities entered under section C of Inland Revenue form 12 FR by taxpayers completing these forms in the latest year for which figures are available;

(2) what were the average earnings and benefits for the most recent year available of taxpayers completing Inland Revenue Tax returns 12 FR.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 26 July 1993]: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Bear Products

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action has been taken by Customs and Excise in respect of the sale of bear bile products by the Sino-Herbalist Centre, 90-92 Shaftesbury avenue, London W1V 7DH.

Sir John Cope: The illegal sale of bear bile products is an offence for which the police, rather than Customs, have enforcement responsibility. Customs has responsibility for the enforcement at importation of Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species controls and is very willing to take appropriate action if provided with information about illegal importation.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give details of all bear products seized by Customs and Excise during each of the last three years for which records are available.

Sir John Cope: HM Customs has made two seizures of bear products in the last three years: one bearskin imported from Norway and seized at Immingham in January 1990 and one rug—Ursus Americanus—imported from Montreal and seized at Heathrow in July 1993.

Taxation

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the total tax take is represented by the budget of the Department of Social Security.

Mr. Portillo: The proportion of general Government receipts accounted for by the Department of Social Security's budget in 1992-93 is estimated to have been 33·6 per cent.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update the information given in chapter 5 of the autumn statement 1992 and annex D of the "Statistical Supplement of the 1992 Autumn Statement".

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Treasury is today publishing a booklet containing estimates of the effects of various illustrative tax changes on tax receipts in 1994-95 and 1995-96 and preliminary estimates of the costs of the main tax reliefs in 1993-94. Copies are being placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

VAT (Domestic Fuel)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the EC directives relevant to the charging of VAT on domestic fuel supplies; what are the current or future requirements of the legislation concerned with Community harmonisation of VAT liability or rate for these supplies; and what communication or indication he has received from the European Commission in respect of the obligations of Her Majesty's Government in respect of these commodities.

Sir John Cope: I regret that it has not been possible to provide a substantive answer before the summer recess. I shall write to the hon. Member shortly and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Civil Servants (Relocation)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes have been made in the rules on interest-free loans advanced to civil servants for house purchase when they are relocated to higher housing cost areas.

Mr. Dorrell: From 4 May 1993, Departments and agencies have had discretion to pay advances of salary of up to 12 months' salary with a repayment period of 20 years, where it is affordable and cost effective to do so. This is an increase over the earlier limit of six months' advance of salary repayable over 10 years. These changes were made as part of a wider delegation to Departments of responsibility for determining the relocation expenses of civil servants.

Tax Fraud

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many officers have been employed investigating tax fraud; and what amounts have been recovered as a result, in each year since 1979.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 26 July 1993]: It is not possible to isolate resources and yield relating to fraud cases from those relating to other tax investigating work. But I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 25 June at columns 327-28, 29 June at columns 454-55, and 6 July columns 100-01.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Regional Assistance

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the amounts received by the United Kingdom in objective 5a grants (a) according to region and (b) the amount directed towards areas within the county of Humberside.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 16 July 1993]: The total amount of European Community funding received for agricultural grants under objective 5a of the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund in the United Kingdom in 1992 was approximately £64 million. This related to total payments within the United Kingdom, including national funding, of around £190 million. The figures include receipts and expenditure in respect of objective 5a schemes paid in objective 1 areas—Northern Ireland—and in objective 5b areas—certain designated rural areas requiring development.

These figures broken down by region are summarised in the table. I regret that a figure for the amount of aid directed towards areas within the county of Humberside could be provided only at disproportionate cost as information on the various schemes is not kept on a county basis.

Scotland	62	20
Wales	36	10

Sheep

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals she intends to bring forward for allocation of quota to sheep producers who are new entrants and those whose claims for sheep annual premium in 1991 were reduced by exceptional factors.

Mr. Jack: These two categories of sheep producer were included in the proposed categories of eligibility for the national reserve about which we consulted the industry earlier this year. The details are currently being finalised. The amounts of quota in the reserve will be limited.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the forms for extra allocations for sheep quotas from the national reserve will be issued before the 6 August cut-off date for quota transfers.

Mr. Jack: The details of the national reserve categories are currently being finalised and the necessary national legislation will be made later in the summer. Applications to the national reserve will not be invited before 6 August. A letter has been sent to all known sheep producers giving guidance about the rules that will operate if they acquire quota by transfer or lease and apply for an allocation from the national reserve.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many of the public bodies for which she is responsible hold meetings in public; and if she will list them.

Mr. Jack: Of the public bodies for which my right hon. Friend is responsible, only the eight agricultural land tribunals in England and Wales and the plant varieties and seeds tribunal hold meetings in public.

Fur Farms

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions in each of the last five years officers of ADAS have visited mink and Arctic Fox fur farms.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Responsibility for this matter is delegated to ADAS and I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Gentleman direct.

Letter from Dr. J. M. Walsh to Mr. Alan Milburn, dated 28 July 1993:

In answer to your question, according to our records in each of the last five years ADAS undertook the following visits on behalf of MAFF.

1988 27
1989 31
1990 26
1991 19
1992 17

Over this period ADAS also undertook a small number (approximately 6) of fee paid consultancy visits to mink farms.

ADAS became an Executive Agency on 1 April 1992. The visits on behalf of MAFF are now carried out under a contract with the MAFF Policy Division. As a contracting organisation, it not our normal practice to disclose information relating to the contracts we undertake. Could I suggest that further enquiries should be directed to the Customer Group within MAFF.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) on how many occasions in the last five years officials of the state veterinary service have advised mink fur farmers to improve the conditions in which the animals are being held in order to avoid prosecution; and if he will give details;

(2) on how many occasions in the last five years officials of the state veterinary service had advised Arctic fox fur farmers to improve the conditions in which the animals are being held in order to avoid prosecution; and if he will give details.

Mr. Soames: In monitoring welfare standards on fur farms, the state veterinary service operates to the guidelines laid down in the relevant recommendations adopted by the Council of Europe. Were conditions to be found which warranted immediate prosecution, we would not hesitate to take such action. Centrally held records on the welfare inspections of fur farms date from 1990 and written advice on improvements was given in one case.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were the number of mink farms over the past 10 years.

Mr. Soames: Information is only readily available for the last five years. No mink farms have been licensed during this time in Wales. Information with regards to England is as follows:

	Number
As at 31 March 1989	52
As at 20 February 1990	43
As at 20 February 1991	25
As at 12 March 1992	25

Sugar

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what was the price in pound per tonne paid to United Kingdom farmers under the common agricultural policy for sugar beet in each month since August 1992;

(2) what was the average price in pound per tonne paid to United Kingdom farmers under the common agricultural policy for sugar beet produced in the 1991-92 sugar beet season and the 1992-93 season.

Mr. Jack: Each year the Council of Ministers sets minimum prices for sugar beet grown to meet the EC's sugar quotas. The actual price per tonne of sugar beet is negotiated between the NFU and British Sugar plc, the United Kingdom's sole beet processor, for the whole crop for that season. An interim price is agreed early in the season and then finalised after the crop is harvested. The final price for contracted sugar beet for 1991-92 harvest was £33·22 and the provisional price for the 1992-93 harvest is £37·32 per tonne.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current (a) common agricultural policy A, B and C quota for sugar production, (b) domestic consumption of sugar and (c) surplus of production over consumption of sugar in each EC member state.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is set out in the table:

Industrial and Marine Bacteria

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she intends to continue to provide funding for the national collections of industrial and marine bacteria.

Mr. Jack: MAFF will provide funding for this company to the end of the current financial year. The Office of Science and Technology will take over responsibility for Government sponsorship of the company from 1 April 1994, pending the outcome of their review of the national need for culture collections.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she plans to make any changes in the licensing arrangements for fishing vessels; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: I am pleased to advise that a number of changes are being made with immediate effect to the present licensing arrangements following the consultation papers issued by the Fisheries Departments in April 1992 and January 1993. We hope that these changes will assist the industry and at the same time contribute towards our multi-annual guidance programme—MAGP—targets for reducing the capacity of the United Kingdom fishing fleet by 31 December 1996.

In early 1992, the Government introduced a 20 per cent. capacity penalty for all licence transfers and aggregations. With my colleagues from the other Fisheries Departments, I have considered the operation of the present penalty and in the light of representations from industry we have decided on certain modifications. These take into account concerns over the structure of the industry, the difference between single licence transfers and aggregations and the licensing and replacement of 10m and under vessels. For example, subject to certain conditions, for vessels of over 10m we are reducing the capacity penalties for single licence transfers and aggregations involving minor engine modifications; and waiving that penalty where sunk vessels are being replaced. In addition, for vessels of 10m and under we are removing the capacity penalty for single licence transfers and allowing licence transfers between vessels with inboard and outboard engines. The detail of these and other changes is as follows.

All existing rules on the "transfer" or "aggregation" of licences will remain in force subject to the following. The 20 per cent. capacity penalty for licence aggregations is being retained, but a 10 per cent. penalty will apply to those aggregations involving minor engine modifications to existing vessels provided the engine power of the vessel, as measured in kilowatts, is not increased by more than 15 per cent. in a single aggregation or in a series of smaller aggregations. In addition, a 10 per cent. capacity penalty will apply to single licence transfers involving vessels over 10m in overall length. No penalty will be applied to single licence transfers affecting vessels of 10m overall length and under where there is no increase in the vessel capacity units of the recipient vessel. The capacity penalty may also be waived where we are satisfied that the vessels being replaced have been destroyed or permanently disabled as a result of fire, sinking or other accidental causes, provided the vessel capacity units of the replacement vessel are no greater than those of the replaced vessel and the age difference between the vessels is not more than seven years, the age of any vessel being determined from the date of its first build.

The transfer and aggregation of licences from vessels of 10m overall length or under to vessels over 10m, or vice versa, will not be permitted. The number of vessels between 10 and 17m overall length which may take part in any future licence aggregation will be limited to two. However, for vessels of 10m overall length or under it will be possible to transfer or aggregate licences between vessels with outboard engines and those with inboard engines.

Our MAGP targets are based on the vessels listed on the fishing vessel register maintained by the Registrar of Shipping and Seamen. To ensure that the register is restricted to active fishing vessels, from 1 November 1993 any person applying to transfer or aggregate fishing licences will need to show, before a new licence is issued, that any donnor vessel has been deregistered or that the donor vessel has been relicensed as part of a separate licence transaction.

Any existing claims to licence entitlements must also be notified to the appropriate Fisheries Department by 1 November 1993 and a valid licence application in respect of a named vessel made by 27 July 1995. Entitlements occurring after the date of this announcement must be notified to the appropriate Fisheries Department within three months, and a valid licence application made within two years, of the date on which the entitlement first arose. Those who fail to notify Fisheries Departments of a licence entitlement, or fail to submit a valid licence application within the time limits specified will normally lose any claim to that licence entitlement. However, where the claim to an entitlement has arisen as a result of the loss of a vessel involving death or serious injury, the time limit for notification may, exceptionally, be extended.

Mr. Beggs To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, (1) how many late applications have been received for fishing vessel licences for 10m and under vessels which were not registered on or before 27 February 1992; and how many of these late applicants have been granted licences;

(2) how many late applications have been received for fishing vessel licences for 10m or under vessels which were not registered on or before 27 February; how many of these late applicants have been granted licences; how many have not been granted licences; and whether these applicants can reclaim the registration fee paid in pursuit of a fishing licence;

(3) how many late applications have been received for fishing vessel licences for 10m and under vessels which were not registered on or before 27 February 1992; and how many of these late applicants have been granted licences.

Mr. Jack: To be eligible for a 10m and under licence, fishermen had to meet one of the following criteria:

(a) own vessels of 10m and under overall length which were on 27 February 1992 registered under part II of the Merchant Shipping Act 1988; and provide evidence of fishing for profit in the reference period 28 February 1991-27 February 1992;
(b) have applied on or before 27 February 1992 to register such a vessel; or
(c) provide evidence of an enforceable financial commitment to obtain such a vessel which was entered into on or before 27 February 1992; or
(d) have replaced a qualifying vessel which was used for commercial fishing during the reference period, provided that the new vessel was no larger in vessel capacity unit terms and the original vessel had been removed from the Register.

More than 6,850 applications for 10m and under licences were received in the United Kingdom—England and Wales about 4,670, Northern Ireland about 245, Scotland about 1,940. By 1 July some 5,330 licences had been issued or approved in principle—England and Wales about 3,550, Northern Ireland about 145, Scotland about 1,635. At the same date some 740 licences had been refused or the applications had been withdrawn—England and Wales about 485, Northern Ireland about 80, Scotland about 175. The remaining applications are being dealt with as quickly as possible.

Licences have been issued to those who were able to meet one of the eligibility criteria set out above. Rejections may have been for a number of reasons, but the main ones relate to applicants being unable to meet the principal criteria because either the vessel was not registered on 27 February 1992 under part II of the Merchant Shipping Act 1988 or the applicant had not fished for profit in the reference period 28 February 1991 to 27 February 1992.

Registration and licensing of fishing vessels are two separate matters. It has long been a requirement that vessels used for fishing for profit have to be registered under the merchant shipping legislation. Anyone who has been fishing for profit when the vessel was not registered has therefore been operating illegally. The question of refunds of registration fees does not therefore arise.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make a statement on her policy on the application by British Nuclear Fuels plc to commission THORP; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 26 July 1993]: BNFL has applied to Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and the Ministry for permission to use natural and depleted uranium to test the THORP plant at Sellafield. A copy of the announcement that we made on 22 July, together with HMIP, on the granting of variations to BNFL's existing authorisations to discharge liquid and gaseous radioactive waste on or after the 12 August 1993 to test THORP can be found in the Library of the House.

Trade Balance

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will show the crude balance of imports and exports of (a) agriculture overall, (b) cereals and (c) the rest of the non-oil, non-visible trade for the United Kingdom, the EC, the United States of America, Canada and the Cairns group countries in 1979, 1984 and each year since 1989.

Mr. Needham: I have been asked to reply.

The figures requested are in the table:

Northmoor Pumping Station

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action she will take to further the conservation of flora and fauna, under section 16 of the Water Resources Act 1991, when considering the eligibility for grant aid of the proposal to replace the pumps at Northmoor pumping station.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 26 July 1993]: Discussions between MAFF, the National Rivers Authority, English

Nature and the Northmoor internal drainage board are still in progress on the proposed new pumps at Northmoor pumping station. In considering the outcome of these discussions, Ministers will fully take into account the requirements of section 16 of the Water Resources Act 1991 as they relate to the conservation of flora and fauna.

ENVIRONMENT

THORP

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 7 June, Official Report, column 100, if he will set out a breakdown of the 83,000 responses to the THORP consultation exercise in a format that is available to his Department.

Mr. Yeo: In their report of the consultation exercise on the draft Sellafield authorisations the inspectorates provide the following breakdown of responses received:

	Number
Total number of letters received	83,731
Illegible names and addresses	12,170
Total for	19,217
Total against	64,514
Proformas	49,041
Petitions for	[1]7
Petitions against	[2]159

[1]18,467 names
[2]28,780 names

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give permission for the uranium section of THORP to be commissioned; and what criteria he would apply in reaching such a decision.

Mr Yeo: HM inspectorate of pollution and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food announced on 22 July that, subject to the completion of the procedures under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960, they are minded to grant a variation of BNFL's existing authorisations to discharge liquid and gaseous radioactive waste, on or after the 12 August 1993, so that natural and depleted uranium could be used to test THORP.

HM inspectorate of pollution and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food reached this position in the light of several considerations. The radiological impact of the emissions from testing THORP in this way would be very small, less than 0·001 per cent. of the average dose to the United Kingdom population from natural background radiation. The impact would be small in comparison with the impact from THORP in full operation if it is allowed to reprocess spent nuclear fuel and—after considering the representations received during the public consultation —HMIP and MAFF inspectors have concluded that the impact from THORP in full operation would be acceptable. Only natural or depleted uranium would be used—no testing with spent fuel would be allowed under the terms of the proposed variation. There would be no increase to the existing limits on emissions from Sellafield.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information is still required before THORP is commissioned.

Mr. Yeo: My right hon. Friend announced in his answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, North (Mr. Thompson) on 28 June, Official Report, column 392, a further round of consultation. A final decision will be taken after this.

Recycling

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps the Government have taken in addressing the option of waste reduction in meeting their recycling targets.

Mr. Yeo: The Government have set a target for recycling 25 per cent. of household waste by the end of the decade. This target relates to materials recycling and composting. However, it is clearly better to avoid waste in the first place, where that is a practicable option, and the Government employ a variety of measures to encourage waste minimisation. In addition to providing for the minimisation of the discharge of pollutant substances, the Environmental Protection Act establishes stringent standards for waste disposal. When fully implemented, these standards will increase the costs of disposal and provide an additional incentive to minimise waste. The Government also run programmes to raise awareness in companies of the benefits of waste minimisation; to demonstrate best practice; and to provide advice and information on cleaner technology for industry. A number of major companies have now set themselves waste reduction targets.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the achievement by local authorities of their recycling plans.

Mr. Yeo: Most local authorities are starting to implement recycling plans which extend over a number of years and we expect to approve those plans which have been submitted more recently by the end of the summer. It would be premature to attempt to assess how much progress has been made in implementation at this early stage.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what effect the import into the United Kingdom of German waste seeking processing outlets is having on package waste disposal in the United Kingdom; and what plans he has to protect schemes in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today by my right hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Milton Keynes, North-East (Mr. Butler).

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how the Government intend to take forward their proposals for increasing the recycling of packaging and other goods and to deal with the threat posed by schemes in other countries.

Mr. Gummer: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Technology and I have today invited the major organisations involved in the packaging chain to draw up a plan by which industry will take responsibility for ensuring that the majority of used packaging is not simply thrown away but returned to beneficial use. We expect this plan to make a significant contribution to meeting the Government's target of recycling 25 per cent. of household waste by the end of the decade.

Recycling minimises the use which we as individuals make of the earth's limited resources and there is already a great commitment to it in many parts of the community. Voluntary groups, charitable bodies, dedicated individuals, business and local authorities have all done much to establish a basic framework of schemes. But today many of these schemes face a crisis and, if we are to safeguard this potential for growth, we need to adopt comprehensive measures which involve all the relevant business sectors.

I believe that many of those in the packaging chain—retailers, fillers, and manufacturers of packaging materials and packaging accept that they should share responsibility for what happens to packaging once it has served its original purpose. My predecessors and colleagues at the Department of Trade and Industry have been discussing with the industry for the past two years how that responsibility might be put into practice.

We have made useful progress in our discussions. But our long-term goals are being put in danger by the damage being caused to Britain's recycling efforts by measures elsewhere in Europe. Many of our European partners are introducing recycling schemes for packaging, but in some of those schemes there is an alarming imbalance between what is collected and the ability to reprocess it. We need to ensure that we get this balance right and that we sustain the recycling infrastructure which we have painstakingly built up so far.

We have therefore decided that urgent action is necessary and that it is time to spell out what the Government expect of industry. That is why I will be meeting senior representatives of retailers, fillers of packaging and manufacturers of packaging and packaging materials over the next few weeks.

We will invite them to produce a plan which meets the following objectives:

producers—retailers, fillers and manufacturers of packaging and packaging materials—must take a share of responsibility for what happens to packaging once it has served its original purpose, while minimising the packaging deemed essential; producers would show that they accept that responsibility by delivering targets for the amount of used packaging which they recover. We accept that recovery targets above 75 per cent. are unlikely to be practicable by the end of the decade. So we are asking them to commit themselves to ensuring that between 50 and 75 per cent. of all packaging waste—the precise level to be agreed with Government—is recovered by the year 2000; producers would bear any extra cost of setting up systems to meet the recovery targets;

we will emphasise to producers the importance of their taking immediate action to ensure that a recycling infrastructure—collectors and processors—continues to be available to them, so that they can meet their recovery targets.

We welcome the initiative already taken by the Institute of Grocery Distribution to finance pilot recycling collection schemes. We would support the idea that recognition should be given to those companies who have contributed to such schemes, when more comprehensive arrangements are established.

We are inviting leading figures in the industry to report back by the end of October on the action which they have taken to help collection and processing operations to continue, especially for waste paper and board and plastics. And we are asking them to present us with an effective plan for meeting the objectives which I have outlined, before Christmas 1993. We will make clear to industry that it should ensure that its plans are compatible with United Kingdom and EC competition law.

If the industries concerned cannot satisfy us by Christmas that they are committed to achieving the objectives, or if they decide that legislative backing is necessary, we will need to move towards a legislative approach to mandating producer responsibility.

We believe that one of the benefits of introducing a scheme of producer responsibility will be that we are better able to demonstrate, in our discussions on a European Community packaging directive, that it is possible to reduce the environmental impact of packaging significantly without placing unreasonable burdens on business. We also wish to ensure that the targets contained in the directive are realistic.

My colleagues and I will also continue our discussions with industries dealing with other waste streams on how they could shoulder responsibility for the wastes which their activities generate. In particular, I will be inviting the newspaper publishers to discuss these issues with me.

The initiative which we are announcing today will form an important part of our recycling strategy. It will allow the public, who would like to see less packaging and who do not want throw away materials which could be used again, to recycle much more than they can at present. It will be another important step in moving towards a society whose daily habits preserve the world for future generations.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which local authorities have not submitted their waste recycling proposals to his Department for approval.

Mr. Yeo: The following local authorities have yet to submit recycling plans to the Department:

Amber Valley
Bolsover
Brent Erewash
Great Yarmouth
Sandwell
Walsall
Wolverhampton

We have received an informal draft from Blackburn, but still await the formal submission of their plan.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list each grant made by his Department for recycling projects.

Mr. Yeo: The following grants have been made available for recycling projects under the environmental action fund in 1993-94:

Waste Watch, National	£196,987
Community Recycling Network, National	£30,000
Eureka Museum for Children, Halifax	£21,950

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for the disposal of intermediate level decommissioning wastes from United Kingdom nuclear power stations; and what capacity will be available within the proposed Nirex repository to accommodate these wastes.

Mr. Yeo: Intermediate level radioactive waste will be stored until it can be disposed of in Nirex's deep disposal facility. The capacity of the facility has yet to be established.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research has been undertaken by his Department into the use of integrated toxicological potential as a basis for determining equivalence between different categories of radioactive waste; and if he will make it his policy to seek the views of THORP's overseas customers concerning such practices.

Mr. Yeo: Consideration of the various aspects of waste substitution is still to be completed. Should substitution be approved it would be for British Nuclear Fuels plc to negotiate appropriate arrangements with its customers within guidelines set by the Government.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has received from British Nuclear Fuels plc in regard to the present projected capacity of the vitrification plant at Sellafield to handle all the high level waste (a) stockpiled and (b) planned to be created arising from reprocessing contracts currently signed by BNFL.

Mr. Yeo: My right hon. Friend has received no such information.

Rural Sewerage, Yorkshire

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what provision for rural sewerage schemes was included in Yorkshires Water's asset management plan for 1989-90 to 1999-2000; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: I am informed by Yorkshire Water that no specific provision for rural sewerage schemes was made in the company's 1989 asset management plan for the period 1989 to 2000. However, the company will respond to statutory requisitions for first-time sewerage in accordance with legal requirements.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 16 July, Official Report, column 707, with whom his Department sought agreement prior to the removal of the commercially sensitive information to which he refers; what is the scope of the points that require clarification with the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee; what timetable he has set for RWMAC to report on the further work; what was the date of the RWMAC press release to which he refers; and if he will place a copy of the press release in the Library.

Mr. Yeo: British Nuclear Fuels agreed the information that was commercially sensitive in RWMAC's report on waste substitution. The further work for RWMAC will relate to the use of the toxic potential index and the waste management implications of waste substitution. I expect to receive further advice from RWMAC later this year. Copies of RWMAC's press release of 28 June have been placed in the Library.

Computer Consultancies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the computer consultancies employed by his Department, since November 1991, the tasks for which they were engaged, and the total cost to his Department.

Mr. Gummer: I have today arranged for a list of the computer consultancies employed by my Department since November 1991, together with and indication of the tasks for which they were engaged, to be placed in the Library of the House. The total cost to the Department was £5,878,713.

New Towns

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he intends to take to secure the orderly completion of the new towns initiative in England.

Mr. Gummer: I have been discussing with Sir Neil Shields, the chairman of the Commission for the New Towns, the scale of the task remaining to be completed to enable the commission to dispose of the bulk of its remaining assets and make provision for disengagement from its current liabilities, and we have agreed that this should be achievable within a five-year period. The Government therefore intend to wind up the Commission for the New Towns by no later than 31 March 1998.

We have also agreed that provision will need to be made for the longer-term management and sale of those assets which it would not be prudent to dispose of within this time scale, and for the on-going management of any remaining liabilities. Discussions will continue on the best ways of providing for these.

I should like to place on record the Government's appreciation of the excellent work undertaken by the commission in completing the biggest and most significant exercise in urban planning ever undertaken in this country. From their origins in the garden city movement, the new towns have been highly successful in promoting local economic growth while, at the same time, providing excellent employment opportunities and living conditions for people of all backgrounds. I have every confidence that the commission's substantive remaining tasks can be brought to a successful conclusion within the next five years.

Water Byelaws

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish details of the number of prosecutions since 1 January 1989 for contraventions of water byelaws made in accordance with his model.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not held centrally. Prosecutions are a matter for individual water companies.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when national regulations will replace water byelaws; and what the enforcement arrangements will be;

(2) what plans he has to improve the level of enforcement of the water byelaws and regulations replacing them by recognising prescribed persons under section 74(2)(d) of the Water Industry Act 1991;

(3) if the proposed environment agency will enforce national water and waste water regulations suggested in paragraph 9·3 (vi) of the consultative document, "Using Water Wisely";

(4) if it is his intention to retain the requirements for prevention of waste, misuse, contamination and undue consumption embodied in the current water byelaws when regulations are introduced to replace these byelaws;

(5) what plans he has to consult the public and the plumbing industry when regulations are drafted to replace the current water byelaws.

Mr. Yeo: The consultation paper "Using Water Wisely" sought views on matters regarding the replacement of water byelaws by regulations, including the issue of enforcement. We shall shortly be publishing the Government's proposals for taking these matters forward. It is intended that regulations will come into force before the current water byelaws expire in 1997. There will be further wide consultation both before and after the regulations are drafted.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will consider making it illegal under consumer legislation to sell plumbing fittings which would contravene the water byelaws, or their replacement regulations, if fitted to the water supply system in or around buildings;

(2) what representations he has received on the practice of selling plumbing fittings which, when fitted and used, are illegal under water byelaws.

Mr. Yeo: I have received two representations about this matter. The supply of construction products, which includes plumbing fittings, is controlled by the Construction Products Regulations 1991. Only those products which satisfy the requirements of these regulations may be lawfully supplied.

Chemical Industries Association

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 16 July, Official Report, column 708, if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting with the Chemical Industries Association.

Mr. Yeo: My right hon. Friend met members and officials of the Chemical Industries Association on Tuesday 20 July. They had a useful exchange of views on a wide range of issues affecting the industry.

Fiddlers Ferry Power Station

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what specific measures are being introduced at Fiddlers Ferry power station to ensure that sulphur dioxide emissions are reduced in line with the European Community directive requiring large combustion plants to cut sulphur dioxide emission to 50 per cent. of 1980 levels by 2000.

Mr. Yeo: The Council directive on the limitation of emissions of certain pollutants into the air from large combustion plants is delivered by the United Kingdom's programme and national plan for reducing emissions of sulphur dioxide and oxides of nitrogen from existing large combustion plants.

Under the programme and plan, the operator of Fiddlers Ferry power station, PowerGen, is given a company wide quota for each year for sulphur dioxide emissions for allocation to individual stations. As limits are not set for individual stations, measures to be used to control emissions of sulphur dioxide are not specified.

Limits are set by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to secure its wider objectives under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Maritime Housing Association, Liverpool

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the committee of management of Maritime housing association, Liverpool, concerning a tenants opinion survey undertaken on behalf of the association; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I have received a letter from the chairman of Maritime housing association on behalf of the committee of management about its tenants opinion survey. The letter outlines the results of the survey relating to the income of tenants, the percentage of tenants in receipt of housing benefit and data on rents.

Before decisions on grant rates for 1994-95 are taken, we will consider all the relevant evidence, including the information provided by Maritime housing association, on rents and the availability of private finance.

Plumbing

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy on the awarding of Government or local authority plumbing contracts to contractors who do not have British Standard Institute BS5750 approval or its European equivalent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: Within the constraints imposed by public procurement legislation, each Government Department and local authority may set its own criteria for the selection of plumbing contractors provided it is done in a non-discriminatory manner. A contractor that has achieved BS5750 certification will have demonstrated it has a high standard quality control system. That may be a factor of which account is taken in the choice of contractor.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many of the public bodies for which he is responsible hold meetings in public; and if he will list them.

Mr. Gummer: The Department of the Environment currently sponsors 29 executive non-departmental public bodies, of which the following regularly hold meetings open to the general public:

Housing Action Trusts
Housing Corporation
Letchworth Garden City Corporation
Local Government Commission
National Rivers Authority
Urban Development Corporations

In addition, the Commons Commission, valuation tribunals and rent assessment panels hold their hearings in public. Other public bodies may hold occasional open meetings or consult the public in other ways as necessary.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if the chairpersons and board members of executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department are required to declare interests, in a form available for public inspection at his Department or at the main offices of the various bodies;

(2) whether the members of (a) urban development corporations—UDCs—(b) housing action trusts—HATs —and (c) registered housing associations are required to declare interests and to make such interests open to public inspection: what statutory provision is made for public access to information about these bodies; whether they are subject to performance indicators; whether they are required to publish an annual report or to hold meetings in public; what charter provisions apply to their activities; and whether members of registered housing associations are liable to surcharge.

Mr. Gummer: All the executive NDPBs spnsored by my Department, including UDCs and HATs, have in place arrangements for chairmen and other board members to declare any conflicts of interest. It is for the bodies themselves to decide whether and in what form to make information on members' interests available to the public.

Section 64 of the Housing Act 1988 requires HATs to issue statements of proposals for consultation, and schedule 8 requires them to publish annual reports. Schedule 31 to the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 requires UDCs to publish annual reports. Neither HATs nor UDCs are required to hold meetings for the general public, but most have chosen to do so.

As a matter of policy, all NDPBs are required to develop and use performance indicators and to apply the principles of the citizens charter in their dealings with the public.

Registered housing associations, which are not NDPBs, are subject to statutory regulation by the Housing Corporation, which is required to maintain and make available for public inspection a register of such associations. Associations are required to submit regular returns, including information about committee members and their interests. The corporation has a duty to supervise associations and monitor their performance against published criteria, including the tenants guarantee. The concept of surcharge as used in the Local Government Finance Act 1982 applies only to local authorities. I will ask the corporation to write to the hon. Member with further details.

Civil Engineering Projects

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to ensure that recycled materials of the appropriate specification will be given priority over quarried aggregate in civil engineering projects.

Mr. Baldry: The choice of materials for use in civil engineering projects is a matter for the market. The Government support an increase in the use of waste and recycled materials in construction and are considering how to achieve this as part of the review of minerals planning guidance note 6 on aggregates.

Rents

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take on rent levels following the publication of the Association of District Councils/Association of Metropolitan Authorities housing finance survey.

Sir George Young: The joint Association of District Councils and Association of Metropolitan Authorities housing finance survey provides a useful contribution to the information which the Department gathers during the course of the financial year, and I was pleased to have a discussion with the associations about their 1993-94 survey at the meeting of the Housing Consultative Council on 7 July. My Department will, as usual, form a view of the emerging picture on local authority housing finance, and all of this information will be taken carefully into account when we reach decisions on the housing revenue account subsidy determinations for 1994-95 towards the end of the year. The level of actual council rents will remain a matter for each housing authority to decide.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the average gross rent before rebate housing benefit for each year since 1978 to date, and with an estimate for 1993, for (a) local authority and (b) housing association dwellings in current prices, in constant prices, and on an index where 1978 = 100.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 26 July 1993]: The available information is as follows:

Average weekly unrebated local authority rent at April

Mr. Baldry: Gross public expenditure for urban development corporations, housing action trusts and registered housing associations, in 1991-92 prices, is set out in the table:

Figures up to 1991-92 represent expenditure outturn. Figures for 1992-93 are for provisional outturn; figures for 1993-94 represent public expenditure provision; and figures for 1994-95 and 1995-96 represent planned expenditure as set out in the Department of the Environment's 1993 annual report, Cm 2207.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish separate tables showing in rank order the number of (a) local authority dwellings, (b) housing association dwellings and (c) former local authority dwellings transferred to housing action trusts or otherwise or by way of large-scale voluntary transfer, for each local housing authority in England; and if he will include totals for each table.

Mr. Gummer: The available information on the transfer of local authority dwellings to housing action trusts and by way of large scale voluntary transfer is given in the tables.

Protected Birds

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Croydon, North-East (Mr. Congdon) of 8 July, Official Report, columns 233-35, what is his policy on the proposals put forward by France, Greece and Spain at the EC Environment Council meeting in Luxembourg on 29 June regarding the extension of sport shooting to a number of protected bird species; what progress has been made by COREPER; and when he now expects the revised annexes to the wild birds directive to be adopted.

Mr. Yeo: The United Kingdom did not oppose the proposals for amending annex II of the bird directive—79/409/EEC—considered at the EC Environment Council on 29 June 1993. No agreement was reached and it is for the presidency to determine how to take the matter forward and the timing of future discussions.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations he had with United Kingdom conservation organisations prior to deciding the United Kingdom position on amendments to annex II of the EC birds directive.

Mr. Yeo: Scientific advice on the proposals was sought from the Joint Nature Conservation Committee. The Royal Society for the Protection of Birds was informed of the proposals and made representations.

Housing Rehabilitation

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the latest figures available to show the extent of the rehabilitation work currently undertaken by housing associations nationally; and if he has any plans to increase the funding available for inner city and rural rehabilitation projects.

Sir George Young: In 1992-93, the Housing Corporation granted approvals for 6,501 rehabilitation units—13·4 per cent. of the programme as a whole. For 1993-94 12·6 per cent of unit allocations were for rehabilitation units.

My objective was to see rehabilitation projects rise to at least 18 per cent. of rented approvals this year. However, I understand that the corporation was unable to achieve this at the same time as taking account of the priorities expressed by local authorities. No target has yet been set for future years.

Waste Management

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) of 6 July, Official Report, column 80, if he will make a statement on the matters discussed and decisions taken in the meetings with the organisation with an interest in waste management licensing to which he refers.

Mr. Yeo: I held meetings with interested parties to enable them to express to me their concerns arising from the delay in implementing waste management licensing; and to discuss the problems that need to be solved before we can implement the licensing system. No decisions were to be expected in such meetings, and none was taken. I repeated my assurance that as soon as I am in a position to give a revised date for waste management licensing, I shall do so.

Housing Grant

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the National Federation of Housing Associations to discuss the implications of the Government's policy on reducing housing association grant.

Sir George Young: I discussed this topic with the National Federation of Housing Associations on 14 July 1993.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to introduce a Gro-grant scheme in England based on the Scottish Homes model.

Sir George Young: I am considering various options to encourage the revival of the private rented sector in England.

Institute for the Environment and Health

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what conclusion the Government had reached, in regard to their announcement in the White Paper "The Health of the Nation", about the creation of an Institute for the Environment and Health; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The Medical Research Council has agreed in principle to establish an institute at its interdisciplinary research centre on mechanisms of human toxicity at the university of Leicester. It will be jointly supported by my Department and by the Department of Health. The institute will act as a focal point on research into the links between environmental quality and health. We expect it will also have a role in supporting Government in international programmes in this field.

The institute will complement, but not impinge on, areas already covered by other Government Departments or other statutory agencies. These include the Health and Safety Executive, which has statutory responsibilities relating to exposures from work activities, and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, whose responsibilities include agricultural chemicals and food safety.

Urban Waste Water Treatment

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish (a) the list of candidate eutrophic sensitive areas and (b) the list of candidate high natural dispersion areas proposed to him by the National Rivers Authority in connection with the implementation of the EC urban waste water treatment directive.

Mr. Yeo: The NRA has not finalised its proposals for these areas. Data are still being collected and discussions with appropriate bodies are continuing. I have placed a copy of the NRA's current working list in the Library of the House. Some areas may not feature in the final NRA list of candidates proposed to my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales and it is also possible that other candidates may be added to the list as a result of ongoing work. Grid references are given for the eutrophic sensitive area candidates and general locations are given for high natural dispersion area candidates, but in both cases the information is only indicative and exact boundaries have not yet been fixed.

Works Contracts

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has yet considered the replies from South Tyneside metropolitan borough council and Stockton-on-Tees borough council to the notices served on the authorities on 1 Febraruy and 8 March, respectively, under section 13 of the Local Government Act 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend has given careful consideration to the responses made by the two authorities to the notices served on them for anti-competitive behaviour on 1 February and 8 March. He has today given directions to South Tyneside and Stockton-on-Tees under section 14 of the 1988 Act requiring them to retender their ground maintenance work and other cleaning work respectively. If the councils wish their direct service organisations to carry out this work after 1 August 1994 they need to satisfy my right hon. Friend, no later than 30 April 1994, that they have fulfilled the competition requirement as laid down in the legislation.

Government Car Service

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place the report by Coopers and Lybrand on the running of the Government car service in the Library.

Mr. Baldry: The Coopers and Lybrand report on the Government car service contains commercially sensitive information. I have therefore decided that it should not be made publicly available.

Methyl Bromide

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what controls have been introduced by his Department on the use of methyl bromide within the United Kingdom; and what plans he has to ban methyl bromide imports into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Yeo: Use of methyl bromide as a fumigant is controlled under the Control of Pesticide Regulations 1986. The guidelines for its use as a soil fumigant are being revised. I have no plans at present to ban its import into the United Kingdom, but imports will be controlled under an EC regulation currently under discussion.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he is introducing to reduce dependency on housing benefit among (a) housing association tenants, (b) council tenants and (c) private rented sector tenants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I will write to the hon. Member.

Public Inquiries

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Surrey, East dated 1 April on the subject of public inquiries regarding Heathrow terminal 5 and the M25 link roads proposal.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend will be writing to my hon. Friend shortly.

Environmental Expenditure

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the results of research on environmental expenditure in the United Kingdom, commissioned by his Department, will be published.

Mr. Yeo: The report will be published in the last week of August, and I am arranging for copies to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Architects (Warne Report)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his response to the Warne report on the architects' profession; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer my right hon. Friend the Minister for Housing, Inner Cities and Construction gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Waterson) on 2 February 1993, Official Report, columns 89-90.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to introduce new guidelines to local authorities concerning the implementation of the hardship clause on uniform business rates payments within the Local Government Finance Act 1988.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend has no plans to alter or replace the existing guidance.

Water Disconnection

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many families had their water supply disconnected in each water authority in each of the past five years.

Mr. Yeo: Information on numbers of households disconnected in the area of each Ofwat customer service committee region is set out in the following table. Although each CSC region relates to the area covered by one of the privatised water and sewerage undertakers, each entry in the table includes figures for the water supply companies operating within that area. For 1988-89 only, the numbers are for total disconnections, that is, domestic and non-domestic.

Air Quality Monitoring

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what comprehensive and comparable monitoring of air quality is carried out by statutory authorities in Greater London; at what precise locations any such activity is carried out, by what means individual or aggregated results are published or made available to the public; and if he will make such reports available in the Library.

Mr. Yeo: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Poll Tax Costs

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total cost to central and local government in each financial year since 1989-90 of administering the poll tax, including the costs of collection and enforcement.

Mr. Baldry: The cost to local government in England of collecting and administering the community charge was £448 million in 1990-91, £467 million in 1991-92, and £449 million—estimated—in 1992-93. Local authorities have budgeted for costs of £145 million in 1993-94. Central Government do not have direct responsibility for these functions.

Bathing Water Standards

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 21 July, Official Report, columns 266-67, on EC bathing waters, what information he has as to the steps the Commission is taking to increase compliance with standards in those countries with more than 100 beaches which failed the mandatory standards.

Mr. Yeo: None, but I understand that the Commission has taken infringement action on the bathing water directive against all member states.

Greenham Common

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what discussions he has had with Berkshire county council about the exclusion of Greenham common from section 194 of the Law of Property Act 1925;

(2) what is his role in respect of the granting of planning consent for developments on Greenham common (a) of a gravel crusher and (b) of other structures.

Mr. Baldry: I will write to the hon. Member.

Refugees

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what payments have been made for each of the past five years, and to which local authorities, in respect of Kurdish refugees, Bosnian refugees, Somali refugees, Vietnamese refugees, Chilean refugees and others; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The following payments were made by my Department in 1989-90 and 1990-91 under a scheme of special financial assistance to local authorities in respect of Turkish asylum seekers:

Local Authority	1989-90 £	1990-91 £
London Borough of Haringey	599,400	—
London Borough of Hackney	141,300	—
London Borough of Islington	—	49,474

The following sums were subsequently recovered from those local authorities, following receipt of audited claims showing expenditure incurred by each authority:

London Borough of Haringey	29,921
London Borough of Hackney	141,300
London Borough of Islington	5,680

During 1992-93, the following payments were made under a scheme of assistance in respect of displaced persons from the former Yugoslavia:

Local Authority	1992-93 £
Aylesbury Vale District Council	23,332
Rochford District Council	3,060
Uttlesford District Council	44,408

Rochford district council subsequently withdrew its claim for assistance and repaid £3,060 to the Department. No other payments of grant in respect of refugees have been made by the Department. However, further amounts in respect of displaced persons from former Yugoslavia will be paid during the current financial year. Also, a new special grant in respect of unaccompanied refugee and asylum-seeking children from various parts of the world will be paid to local authorities this year.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his intentions as regards the arrangements to be adopted for handling the transfers of assets and liabilities between authorities necessitated by local government restructuring; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: My officials are discussing with officers of the Association of District Councils and the Association of County Councils the practical implications of any transfers of assets and liabilities between local authorities which might be necessitated by local government restructuring. In the light of these discussions, we intend to consult the local authority associations and local authorities on proposals for the treatment of local authority assets and liabilities in any local government restructuring.

Local Authority Associations

Mr. Olner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many meetings he has had with representatives of the local authority associations since April 1992.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 26 July 1993]: Between April 1992 and 27 May 1993, my right hon. and learned Friend the then Secretary of State had 13 meetings with representatives of the local authority associations. Since his appointment on 27 May, the Secretary of State has had three meetings with representatives of the associations.

Government and Public Bodies (Transferred Functions)

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the functions transferred to central Government Departments and bodies, or to non-elected bodies, consequent upon (a) the abolition of the Greater London council, (b) the abolition of the metropolitan counties and (c) other legislation enacted since 3 May 1979.

Mr. Gummer: I will deal first with (a) and (b) of the question. The Local Government Act 1985 provided for most of the functions of the Greater London council—GLC—and the metropolitan county councils—MCCs to be devolved respectively to the London borough councils and the City of London and the metropolitan district councils. The exceptions were responsibility for:

(i) police—which was was transferred to Joint Police Authorities (except in London), many of whose members are elected local authority councillors,

(ii) fire, civil defence and passenger transport—which was transferred respectively to Joint Fire and Civil Defence Authorities and Passenger Transport Authorities all of whose members are elected councillors

(iii) waste disposal—transferred to a mixture of statutory and voluntary joint bodies covering all the areas of the former metropolitan county councils and part of London

(iv) certain arts and museums responsibilities were transferred to the Arts Council, English Heritage and the Office of Arts and Libraries (now Department of National Heritage)

(v) Land Drainage (all areas)—to Regional Water Authorities (now water companies),

(vi) Trunk Roads (London) to the Secretary of State for Transport and,

(vii) Pensions Administration—for the GLC and South Yorkshire MCC, pensions administration was transferred to two pensions fund authorities.

To turn to (c), we have been able to identify the following functions:

the Local Government Planning and Land Act 1980 created 12 urban development corporations as development control planning authorities in place of certain local authorities.

the London Regional Transport Act 1984 transferred London Regional Transport from GLC to the Secretary of State for Transport.

the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 removed from local education authorities the responsibility for appointing all, or a majority of, the governors of county and controlled schools. Local management of schools (LMS) means that from April 1994 the governing body of every primary and secondary school will manage the school's budget and be responsible for appointing its staff.

the Education Reform Act 1988 removed from local authorities responsibility ' for the provision of higher education, made possible the introduction of independent City Technology Colleges (CTCs) and removed the power of LEAs to set schools' admission limits.

the Housing Act 1988 established Housing Action Trusts and removed a number of housing units from local authority control.

the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Act 1993 transfers the duty to provide a careers service to the Secretary of State.

the Health and Safety (Emissions into the Atmosphere) (Amendment) Regulations 1989 added a number of processes to those subject to control by Her Majesty's Inspection of Pollution.

the Poultry Meat (Hygiene) Amendment Regulations 1992 transferred responsibility for licensing poultry meat slaughterhouses from local government to the Minister of Agriculture Fisheries and Food.

the Further and Higher Education Act 1992 made colleges of further education including sixth form colleges, self-governing with their funding arrangements transferred to the Further Education Funding Councils for England and Wales.

the Education (Schools) Act 1992 provided that from 1993 for secondary schools, and 1994 for all other schools, local authorities will lose their general power of school inspection.

the Local Government Act 1992 transferred certain duties and powers in relation to parish reviews from district councils to the Local Government Commission.

the Leashold Reform, Housing and Urban Development Act 1993 gives the Secretary of State power to designate an area within which the Urban Regeneration Agency would become the local planning authority and have development control powers within that area.

We have also identified the following functions which have been gained by local government since 3 May 1979:

the Social Security and Housing Benefits Act 1982 transferred the administration of rents and rates rebates and allowances from the (then) DHSS to local authorities.

since the abolition of the GLC and the metropolitan county councils, metropolitan districts have been required to prepare unitary development plans (the Secretary of State was previously responsible for the final stages and adoptions).

the Health and Safety (Enforcing Authority) Regulations 1989 transferred certain enforcement responsibilities to local authorities.

as a result of our community care reforms, local authorities have been given lead responsibility for assessing people's needs for community care and purchasing residential and nursing home care (in place of the Department of Social Security).

the Planning and Compensation Act 1991 transferred responsibility for the final stages and adoption of structure plans in shire counties to county councils (the Secretary of State was previously responsible).

the Environmental Protection (Prescribed Processes and Substances) Regs 1991 returned certain processes to local authority control.

the Road Traffic Act 1991 transferred parking regulations from Department of Transport to local authorities.

the Products of Animal Origin (Import and Export) Regulations 1992 transferred responsibility for enforcing animal health controls at ports on products of animal origin from third world countries from MAFF to local authorities.

Leasehold Reform, Housing and Urban Development Act 1993 transferred power to determine exclusions from Right to Buy from the Environment Secretary to local government.

National Health Service Land

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much NHS land has been sold with planning permission for commercial development in each of the past five years.

Mr. Sackville: I have been asked to reply.

This information is not available centrally. Health authorities are required to obtain the best price that can reasonably be obtained in disposing of surplus land, and land which has the potential for development should normally be sold with the benefit of planning permission. In the past 10 years, the national health service has disposed of over 5,000 hectares realising £1·1 billion which has been reinvested in health services.

TRANSPORT

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Norris: The Department continues to help small businesses, through improvements to the business climate, through deregulation and through specific programmes of support and assistance. The Department's aim of a more efficient, safe and environmentally friendly transport system, using the market to offer the widest possible choice to transport users, will assist businesses of all sizes.

My Department is, like others, systematically reviewing the regulations for which it is responsible to ensure that unnecessary or over-burdensome regulation is cut back. When considering new regulations, we will take particular account of the burden those regulations impose on small businesses.

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all those services or functions contracted out in his Department and agencies, since November 1991, in which the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were not applied.

Mr. Norris: The information is as follows:

1. Procurement and Storage of Protective Clothing

The service was contracted out from DOT. All the staff involved were to transfer to other duties and the implications of the TUPE regulations did not arise.

2. Bulk/High Speed Reprographic Service

The service was contracted out on a split award, a proportion being awarded to HMSO. This service was formerly provided to DOT by the Property Services Agency which withdrew the service. As no DOT staff were involved in the contracted-out service, the TUPE regulations could not be applied within DOT.

Land Compensation

Mr. Deva: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions he has exercised the powers of section 62 of the Planning and Compensation Act 1991 since the section came into force; what projects these related to; on how many times other promoters of transport schemes have exercised these powers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: These powers have been exercised by the Secretary of State on 357 occasions since they came into force. They have been used to approve the purchase of property which is, in the opinion of the Secretary of State, likely to be seriously affected by the construction or opening of new or widened trunk roads in England. The exercise of these powers, which are discretionary, is a matter for individual promoters; I regret that the Department has no information on how they are operated by others.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many of the public bodies for which he is responsible hold meetings in public; and if he will list them.

Mr. Norris: Board meetings and committee meetings of public bodies for which my right hon. Friend is responsible are not held in public.

Tribunal hearings which hear appeals against the Civil Aviation Authority's decisions on the granting or otherwise of licences or certificates are open to the public on application. The eight traffic commissioners all hold public inquiries in connection with bus and goods vehicle operator licensing. Other bodies may hold consultation meetings in public from time to time as circumstances require.

National Parks

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met members from each of the national parks authorities to discuss improvements in access to the national parks for tourists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Neither my right hon. Friend nor I have recently met members of the national park authorities to discuss access for tourists; nor have they asked for such a meeting. Tourist access would normally be a matter for the national parks authorities to pursue with local highway authorities who would also need to take into account the interests of local people and others travelling in the area.

Motorways (Scheduled Works)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the details of each scheduled road works to English motorways for July, August and September.

Mr. Key: The list shows the major motorway roadworks in England which are expected to be taking place during all or part of the months of July, August and September.

In addition to these schemes, some minor roadworks and routine maintenance on motorways may be necessary. These will be carried out at night whenever possible.

Driving Licences

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to carry out the timetable for the full legislative implementation of the second European directive on driving licences.

Mr. Key: The legislation necessary to implement the second EC directive on the driving licence has to be in place before 1 July 1994. Public consultation on the changes will begin shortly. Draft regulations under the European Communities Act 1972 will be put forward in the next parliamentary Session.

Motorways (Tourism)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultation he has had with the English tourist board regarding access to tourist destinations from or via English motorways during the summer.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend has held no consultations with the English tourist board on this matter; nor has the board made an approach for such a meeting.

Operator Licences

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many applications there were in each traffic area for (a) operator licence applications and (b) renewal of operator licences; how many were refused in each area; and what was the reason in each case for refusal of operator licence applications.

Mr. Key: The figures requested for the year 1992-93, are as follows:

		Number of applications			Number of refusals
Traffic area	Type of licence	New	Number	Renewal	New	Number	Renewal

[1] New and renewal.

Separate figures for new and renewal applications for passenger vehicle operator licences, and the reason for refusal in each case, are not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what changes he intends to introduce relating to the deregulation of the operating licensing regime for heavy goods vehicles and buses.

Mr. Key: The views of consultees on the proposals contained in the consultation document "Passengers and Goods Vehicle Operator Licensing" circulated on 27 May 1993, are being considered and a statement will be made in due course.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a copy of the joint report by the traffic commissioners against continuous operators licensing.

Mr. Key: The traffic commissioners did not submit a formal report in response to the consultation document on operator licensing and it is not our normal practice to publish individual responses to consultations of this nature. The views of consultees on the proposals contained in the document of 27 May 1993, "Passenger and Goods Vehicle Operator Licensing"—a copy of which was placed in the Library—are being considered and a statement will be made in due course.

Lorries

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has had regarding the proposal to increase lorry axle weights to 44 tonnes, with particular reference to pressing for such vehicles to be confined to the motorway network only; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The proposal on which we issued a consultation document in March was an increase in the maximum gross weight to 44 tonnes for six-axle articulated lorries and drawbar trailer combinations carrying containers and swap-bodies to and from railheads in combined road/rail operations. No change was proposed to the maximum axle weight. We received a number of representations that careful consideration should be given to the routeing of 44-tonne vehicles, particularly in urban areas, but none that they should be confined to the motorway network, which would be impractical. In fact, the 44-tonne, six-axle vehicle would be no larger and cause no more road wear than present vehicles. We hope to be able to announce our conclusions on the consultation soon.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the amounts planned to be spent on strengthening road bridges to take heavier lorries, in each of the years in the current public spending round; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert Key: In 1988-89, the Department of Transport started a 15-year programme for the rehabilitation of bridges on national roads in England. The programme involves assessing the condition of bridges, and strengthening them where necessary. This year the Department plans to spend £150 million.

The Department also provides support to English local authorities for the maintenance of their bridges by way of transport supplementary grant and credit approvals. This year, this support will total £137 million. The exact amount spent will depend on local authorities' priorities.

The national and local bridge programmes are intended to cater for the increasing volume of traffic as well as to provide for heavier lorries.

Expenditure in the next three years will depend on the need for strengthening identified by the assessment programme and the outcome of the current public spending round.

Buses

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what discussions he has had with bus operators regarding possible improvements in bus design to increase passenger safety;

(2) what discussions he has had with organisations representing bus passenger users regarding possible improvements in bus design to increase passenger safety; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The prospect of an EC directive concerning bus and coach construction is currently under discussion within the European Commission. All future proposals to change the constructional requirements of these vehicles will have to be agreed by member states.

As part of our continuing aim to improve the safety of passengers using these vehicles, we maintain contact with representative organisations of both users and operators.

Environmental Assessments

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when his Department intends to issue an updated and expanded environmental assessment manual for scheme assessment.

Mr. Key: Volume 11 of the "Design Manual for Roads and Bridges—Environmental Assessment" has been published today. A copy will be placed in the Library.

Traffic Calming

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when traffic-calming regulations are to be introduced.

Mr. Key: I am pleased to announce that the Highways (Traffic Calming) Regulations 1993 have now been made, and laid in Parliament. They give highway authorities clear legal powers to use a range of engineering measures as part of traffic-calming schemes. The regulations will come into effect on 27 August 1993. Traffic calming can have very worthwhile effects in improving local environments and in assisting road safety. Measures to keep speeds to appropriate levels and alter the way drivers behave are as relevant to small towns and villages as they are to large urban locations. I want to see the use of traffic calming spread as rapidly and widely as possible. My Department will assist this process by assessing good practice, and generating technical guidance on techniques that can be used.

Civil Aircraft

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the Civil Aviation Authority has made a final response to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on the CAA's provision of air navigation and air traffic control services to civil aircraft published in July 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The Civil Aviation Authority publishes its third and final response today. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library. Hon. Members will see that the final response records all the progress made since the report itself was published.

The authority's initial response, made in December 1990, said that the authority had accepted all but one of the MMC's 40 recommendations. I am pleased to report that 30 of the recommendations have now been fully acted upon—in some cases, the authority has gone even further in implementing the recommendations than was envisaged by the MMC—and substantial progress has been made on a further five which have proved more complex than originally envisaged.

In three instances, practical constraints have meant that the recommendations could not be implemented in precisely the way proposed by the MMC. But the authority is taking all possible steps to fulfil the intent of the recommendations.

In the three years since the report was published, the effects of the recession on the aviation industry have caused the authority to pay special attention to cost control and improved effectiveness. It is to the authority's credit that it has made such good progress in implementing the report against so difficult a background.

Street Works Advisory Committee

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the street works advisory committee.

Mr. Key: I am glad to say that I have reappointed the committee for a period of two years from 1 July 1993 to 30 June 1995, with a particular remit to produce a report for publication towards the end of that period. This will complete the committee's work and it will then be wound up.

I am grateful to the committee for its work since it was first appointed in 1987, and look forward to receiving its advice during this further period.

Tankers

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secetary of State for Transport what action is currently undertaken by his Department to monitor tanker movements in dangerous sea passages.

Mr. Norris: The United Kingdom Chamber of Shipping, in consultation with the Department, developed an interim voluntary code for the routeing of tankers around the United Kingdom coast, which includes recommendations for reporting their movements to coastguard stations in sensitive areas. It is anticipated that the International Maritime Organisation's assembly will formally adopt the reporting proposals in the autumn.

Blind and Partially Sighted People

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what arrangements his Department makes to ensure that blind and partially sighted people have access to information produced by his Department where it has not been published in alternative media such as Braille, large print or tape.

Mr. Freeman: Information published by the Department's disability unit is produced on tape as a matter of course; the unit's short documents are produced in Braille, and large print is produced on request.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his Department's policy on which information produced by his Department is published in alternative media to standard print such as Braille, tape or large print.

Mr. Freeman: The Department does not make special arrangements to ensure that blind and partially sighted people have access to most of the information it produces.

However, it does take care to ensure that the availability of its information is brought to the attention of as wide a range of the public as possible—including through the broadcast media.

In addition, information published by the Department's disability unit is produced on tape as a matter of course; the unit's short documents are produced in Braille, and large print is produced on request.

This policy is being reviewed.

M11

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will re-evaluate the environmental standards applied to M11 link road through Leyton and Leytonstone.

Mr. Norris: No. The assessment of the environmental effects of the A12, Hackney-M11 link road has been the subject of public debate over many years and through three public inquiries. All statutory procedures are complete and we expect to begin work in Wanstead in the autumn.

West Coast Main Line

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from the transport users consultative committee for north-western England concerning investment and modernisation of the west coast main line for provision of IC225 trains for that route; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The most recent representation from the transport users' consultative committee about upgrading the west coast main line was in its 1992-93 annual report which was sent to me earlier this month.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from operators who may wish to bid for franchises for passenger rail services in Wales.

Mr. Freeman: We have received a number of private sector expressions of interest in passenger rail franchises that would operate services in Wales.

Landscape Advisory Committee

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the members of the Landscape Advisory Committee; and which new road and road improvement schemes have been investigated by the committee within Wales in each of the last two years;

(2) if he will make it his policy to publish the reports on new road schemes and road improvements schemes produced for his Department by the Landscape Advisory Committee.

Mr. Key: The current members of the Landscape Advisory Committee are:

Professor D. K. C. Jones (Chairman)
Sir H. E. Aubrey-Fletcher
Professor M. Benwell
Dr J. A. Bergg
Professor G. E. Cherry
Mr. L. J. Clark

A470	Llanwrst Bypass	19 March 1993

Reports on road schemes in England and Wales which have been submitted by the Landscape Advisory Committee are already made available, on request, to any member of the public following the announcement of the preferred route for the scheme.

Barge, Hallsands

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will arrange for the barge scuttled at Hallsands, south Devon to be removed as a danger to shipping; and if he will make a statement as to the circumstances in which the barge was sunk and the application of the Oslo convention to the sinking.

Mr. Norris: I understand that the barge in question was being used in connection with coast protection works being undertaken for the National Rivers Authority. It has been moved from where it first sank, and subsequently scuttled nearby. It is an offence under the Coast Protection Act 1949 to deposit any object on the seabed so that obstruction or danger to navigation is caused, without the consent in writing of the Secretary of State. That consent was not sought in advance as the Act requires. We have had an application from a local person seeking retrospective consent for this action which has now been refused. My Department has invoked its powers of enforcement to ask the National Rivers Authority to ensure that this unauthorised danger is cleared as a matter of urgency. International agreements regulating scuttling have been implemented through the Food and Environment Protection Act 1973, administered by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. It, too, is considering appropriate action in this case.

Supply Vessels

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the percentage of supply vessels operating in the British sector of the North sea which were foreign flagged (a) in 1982 and (b) in 1992.

Mr. Norris: The Department does not collect details of supply vessels operating in the North sea, but I have obtained from other sources the following figures for June of each year: (a) 51 per cent. (b) 45 per cent.

Harbours (Speed Limits)

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what proposals he has received from Poole harbour commissioners to make byelaws relating to speed limits of vessels; and what was the outcome;

(2) if he will list those harbours on the English south coast that do not have speed restrictions in place;

(3) what consultations his Department has had on the environmental implications of vessel speed in the Poole harbour site of special scientific interest.

Mr. Norris: Poole harbour commissioners' proposed amendments to the harbour byelaws, for confirmation by the Secretary of State, to allow a speed limit of 10 knots to be imposed on power driven vessels, to enable water ski-ing and aquaplaning to be restricted to specified zones, and to exclude boardsailing from the main navigation channel. The last of these did not prove to be contentious and that amendment has been confirmed. The proposed speed and zoning restrictions, however, attracted a large number of objections. The commissioners have now produced a considered response to these, upon which the objectors have been given an opportunity to comment. The Secretary of State will then proceed to a decision as soon and possible. The local Act empowering the commissioners to make byelaws does not provide for any public inquiry into objections to proposed amendments and written representations have therefore been relied on.

The Department does not have a readily available record of speed limit byelaws by all harbour authorities. The commissioners' response refers to 25 harbour authorities on the south coast which have such limits. Poole already has one of 6 knots for the little channel, Poole quay channel and Holes bay. The commissioners have not proposed the amendments to their byelaws primarily on environmental grounds, but they have drawn attention to such considerations in their report.

Passenger Vessels

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to ensure the full compliance with the regulations on passenger vessels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: All passenger vessels operating to and from United Kingdom ports must comply with national and international requirements. An inspection programme is in place to ensure that these ships meet those requirements.

North Sea Pollution

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information has been reported to Her Majesty's Government under the Polrep reporting system of the 1983 Bonn agreement on co-operation in dealing with pollution of the North sea; and what incidents have been reported by contracting parties on radioactive releases under the Bonn agreement.

Mr. Norris: I will write to the hon. Member.

East London River Crossing

Ms Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley) of 7 July, Official Report, columns 158-59, if he will ensure that any new proposals in respect of the east London river crossing will not run through, over or under any part of Oxleas wood; if new proposals in respect of the east London river crossing will be the subject of a full environmental impact assessment in accordance with the terms of EC directive 85/337/EEC, section 105A of the Highways Act 1980 and the Highways (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1988, and that there will be a public inquiry; and if in bringing forward new proposals, he will consider alternatives to a road link.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 26 July 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dartford (Mr. Dunn) on Monday 26 July 1993, at column 584.

WALES

Orange Badges

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to issue new guidelines to local authorities in Wales concerning (a) the allocation of parking spaces to orange badge holders within (i) new car parking facilities and (ii) existing car parking facilities and (b) the accessibility of car park ticket machines.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Government encourage local authorities to provide extra parking facilities wherever possible by designating special bays at convenient locations both on-street and in off-street car parks. Orange badge laws do not extend to off-street car parks, whether local authority or privately owned.

The accessibility of car park ticket machines is for the operator of the car park to determine. Current British standards for pay and display machines include requirements regarding the height of the display and coin slots, and the dimensions, of any plinth upon which the machines may be mounted. These requirements should facilitate access by wheelchair users.

Schools (Disabled Access)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to place a duty on local authorities to publish annually details of the proportion of local authority schools which are accessible to disabled people.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I have no plans to introduce such a duty. It is for each local education authority to decide what measures are required to fulfil its statutory obligations to ensure access to disabled people in schools. In addition, individual schools can publish details about their access facilities for disabled people in their prospectuses.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Redwood: The Government continue to help small businesses through improvements to the business climate, through deregulation and through specific programmes of support and assistance.

Measures operated by my Department to assist small businesses include:

Enterprise Promotion

There are now seven training and enterprise councils (TECs) providing business counselling and support for small businesses across Wales. During 1992-93, TECs received 42,843 inquiries and provided 13,903 counselling sessions. In the same year, TECs also provided business start-up funding totalling £1·919 million; 2,077 businesses were using the business start-up scheme at the end of March 1993.

In addition to the work of the TECs, local enterprise agencies provide a range of support services to new and growing businesses. There are now 22 local enterprise agencies in Wales, including four merged to form two new agencies in 1991. The 22nd agency commenced operations on 2 July 1993. Enterprise and small business growth are also promoted under the Enterprise Wales scheme. Since its launch in 1988, more than 6,500 companies have applied for consultancy advice provided through this initiative.

Grant Support

Small businesses continue to take advantage of help available under regional selective assistance. During the year ending 30 June 1993, 120 firms employing under 200 accepted offers of regional selective assistance totalling £22·463 million, an increase of almost 17 per cent. on the previous year. A further 163 small firms—i.e., those with fewer than 25 employees for investment grant and fewer than 50 for innovation grant—accepted offers of regional enterprise grant totalling £2·469 million, an increase of 38 per cent. over the same period.

In addition, the Welsh Development Agency made 80 loans during 1992-93 with a value of £0·631 million from its small loans scheme. The Development Board for Rural Wales offered £2·8 million mid-Wales development grant assistance to 36 projects helping to generate private sector investment of £22 million and creating or safeguarding 1,172 job opportunities.

The small firms merit award for research and technology (SMART) continues to be very popular. In the previous two years, Welsh industry has gained 16 of the awards, 9 per cent. of the United Kingdom total. Under the support for products under research scheme (SPUR), grant support awarded to companies in Wales rose from £0·75 million in 1991 to £0·96 million in 1992, a percentage increase of 28 per cent.

Deregulation

The Welsh Office is contributing fully to the Government's deregulation initiative to lift the burden of Government regulations on business. No Wales-only regulations have been identified as placing a burden on business, but a consultation exercise is being carried out to assess the impact of United Kingdom-wide regulations on Welsh firms.

Primary School Assistant Teachers

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the average amount spent by local education authorities in Wales in advertising each assistant teacher vacancy within the primary school sector.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not held centrally.

Aerospace Industry

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to respond to job losses in the aerospace industry in Clwyd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I am sorry about the job losses announced in Clwyd. The Welsh Office and other Government agencies already operate a wide range of measures aimed at increasing employment opportunities throughout Wales. All these bodies will continue to look for and respond swiftly to opportunities that arise which have the potential to increase employment prospects. Of course, we stand ready to help, within our powers, where we can in these difficult cases.

Beaches (Pollution)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the beaches tested for entero-viruses in Wales in (a) 1991 and (b) 1992;

(2) how many tests for salmonella were conducted on each beach in Wales in (a) 1991 and (b) 1992.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The number of samples analysed by the National Rivers Authority for entero-viruses and for salmonella from EC identified bathing waters in Wales were published in the 1991 and 1992 volumes of "Bathing Water Quality in England and Wales", copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Defence Job Losses

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Mid-Staffordshire (Mr. Fabricant) on 19 July, Official Report, column 7, what was the source of the estimate of job losses in the defence sector to which he refers.

Mr. Redwood: The source was Conservative central office.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many of the public bodies for which he is responsible hold meetings in public; and if he will list them.

Mr. Redwood: The information is not held centrally.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 6 July, Official Report, column 64, whether a register of the interests declared by members of non-departmental public bodies available for public inspection, is maintained by his Department or at the main offices of the various bodies.

Mr. Redwood: No central register is maintained. It is the practice of some bodies to publish such information in their annual report and accounts.

GP Fund Holders

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if a decision has been made regarding the final allocation of resources for 1993-94 to family health services authorities in respect of general practitioner practice expenses and support costs for general practitioner fund holders.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: On Thursday 4 March, Official Report, columns 255-61, in announcing the cash allocation for 1993-94 for health authorities, my right hon. Friend indicated that further resources would be made available to family health services authorities in respect of GP fund holders' support costs. He explained also that £867,000 held back from the initial allocation to the authorities of funding for GP cash-limited expenses would be distributed following the outcome of a consultation.

The authorities will be responsible for 71 operational and 31 preparatory GP fund holders in Wales in 1993-94. In recognition of the enhanced practice management computer systems required by fund holders, funding of up to £7,000 to meet the full computer maintenance costs of each operational fund holding practice and up to £22,000 to meet the additional computer hardware and software costs involved in preparing for fund holding will be available. Allocations to authorities will be in line with the numbers of operational and preparatory fund holders in each area.

Separate funding is provided to authorities in respect of their expenditure on GPs' practice premises, practice support staff and practice computerisation—distinct from that for fund-holding practices. Prior to this year, the shares of the total annual funding for this purpose were determined largely by the extent of past investment decisions by GPs.

The period immediately before the introduction of the revised GP contract in April 1990 saw substantial growth in committed expenditure on practice premises improvement. In addition, the revised contract stimulated increased investment in practice support staff. During the period 1989-90 to 1993-94, the resources for expenditure on GP practice expenses in Wales increased by 67 per cent. in real terms.

In April, 1993, all health authorities and community health councils in Wales, plus GP professional interests, represented by the General Medical Services Committee (Wales) and, at the local level, by individual local medical committees, were consulted on proposals to allocate this funding with effect from 1993-94 on the basis of a weighted capitation formula. Copies of the consultation document are in the Library of the House.

This formula produces for each family health services authority a target share of the total resource available for Wales for GP practice premises, support staff and practice computerisation. The starting point for the formula is the resident population of each district, taken from the population estimates based on the 1991 census. This is weighted for age and sex, by GP consultation rates for Wales and by the standardised mortality ratios for the area. In recognition of the heavier costs involved in providing additional surgeries to ensure reasonable access for patients in rural areas, the formula includes a rurality component based on comparative road lengths. This component is given a 15 per cent. weighting in the formula.

It is our view that this formula meets the essential criteria for a capitation-based approach to the allocation of health care resources. In addition, the population basis of the formula is consistent with the features of the GP contract whereby age-banded capitation lists comprise the major fees mechanism in remunerating and partially reimbursing GPs, and a special subvention is given in recognition of the specific problems of rural areas.

A change of this order in any resource allocation process cannot take place overnight. It is our intention that authorities' progression, from their historical shares of funding for this expenditure to their target shares based on the weighted capitation formula, will be phased over the period from the present financial year to 2002-03. This will take place against a planning framework which recognises continued real terms growth throughout the period. The span of this transitional period should ensure that those authorities with a reducing share of the total funding will be able to plan an orderly realignment of their expenditure plans; and those with increasing shares of the total resources will be able to utilise the extra funds as effectively as possible. In both cases, the availability of resources for reinvestment—as existing cost rent schemes mature—coupled with the beneficial effect on allocations of the reduction in interest rates, should, with good management, ensure continued development of GP support staffing and facilities throughout Wales over this period.

Whilst I remain convinced that the services provided by family doctors in rural parts of Wales require a recognition of unavoidable additional costs, I am open to further suggestions on how best to do this. Therefore, during this year, there will be further consultations to discuss this aspect of the formula. During the course of the transitional period to 2002-03, the Welsh Office will remain open to opportunities and proposals for improving the formula.

As I have indicated, pending the outcome of the consultation exercise, £867,000 was held back from the initial allocations for 1993-94 for expenditure on GPs' practice premises, practice support staff and practice computerisation. We propose to use this to initiate the progression from historical shares of funding for this expenditure, to target shares, as indicated by the weighted capitation formula. The £867,000 will be divided equally between Clwyd, Mid Glamorgan and West Glamorgan, which are at present below their target shares. Taking account of this, the intended final revenue allocations for 1993-94 for this purpose are shown in table 1, together with the capital allocations. Table 2 shows each authority's percentage share of the total revenue funding for 1993-94 for this purpose, as a consequence of these final allocations, compared with the target share to be attained by 2002-03.

I envisage that the progression to target shares over the 10-year span to 2002-03 will be effected in two ways: first, by directing available growth funding each year to those authorities remaining below their target shares, pro rata with their respective distance from their target shares; and, secondly, for those authorities above their target shares, there will be three years of marking time—no growth funding but also no reduction in funding—followed in subsequent years by a series of annual percentage reductions in their shares. The funding thereby released will be added to available growth funding and allocated to below-target authorities. On this basis and, I must stress, for planning purposes only, the percentage changes in annual revenue funding for this purpose that authorities in Wales might anticipate over the next 10 years are shown in table 3.

For the sake of completeness, table 4 shows the final allocations incorporating funding for the additional costs of computer support for GP fund holders. As fund holding has progressed at markedly different rates in different parts of Wales, this funding element is not included in the formula shares. Authorities will also be able to draw from Welsh Office funds relating to GP fund holder management allowances within the prescribed limits.

Construction Contracts

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received about the proposal that construction contracts worth over £1 million should continue to be subject to compulsory competitive tendering during the period of local government reorganisation in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I have received a number of representations, including some from the private sector.

In the light of those representations, I have decided that it would be appropriate to continue to require competition for construction contracts worth over £500,000. This change will enhance the opportunities of private sector firms to compete for work from local authorities during the period of local government reorganisation.

Trauma

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many major trauma units are in operation in Wales; and what is the projected budget for trauma in 1994, 1995 and 1996.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Lady to my answer to the hon. Member for Ynys Môn (Mr. Jones), on 26 January 1993, Official Report, column 671.

Projected budgets for trauma are not available. Individual health authorities are funded on the basis of their resident populations and it is a matter for them to determine the level of funding needed to secure a comprehensive range of health services, including the treatment of trauma, for their residents.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) orthopaedic trauma operations and (b) trauma operations were performed in Wales in each year since 1990.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is not immediately available. I will write to the hon. Lady and place a copy of the reply in the Library of the House.

NHS Provider Units

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place a copy in the Library of the guidelines of March 1993 on the pricing and costing of services by provider units within the NHS to purchasers.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The guidance issued in March 1993 related to the costing of specific service targets within contracts to be let by Welsh health authorities in 1993-94. Earlier this month, more general guidance on costing for contracting in future years was issued by the Welsh Office following work undertaken in England. Copies of both documents have now been placed in the Library of the House.

Incontinence Aids

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place a copy in the Library of the guidance on the free supply of incontinence aids by health authorities on a non-discriminatory basis.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Annex C of Welsh Office circular 27/93 provides guidance on the supply of incontinence aids for people living in the community.

A copy of this circular has been placed in the Library of the House.

Educational Qualifications

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many, and what percentage, of (a) women and (b) men in Wales have (a) university degrees, (b) higher technician diplomas, (c) craft/lower technical diplomas and (d) no vocational qualifications at the latest available date;

(2) how many, and what percentage, of those working in Wales have (a) university degrees, (b) higher technician diplomas, (c) craft/lower technical diplomas and (d) no vocational qualifications at the latest available date.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I will write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Forestry

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list, by county, those forest areas in Wales currently available for sale to the private sector.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I will write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many grant-maintained schools there are in Wales; what are the rules about the personal responsibility of members of their governing bodies; whether members are required to declare interests; what statutory provision is made for public access to information about a school and the governors' proceedings; what charter provision applies to their activities; and whether they are subject to performance indicators.

Sir Wyn Roberts: There are seven grant-maintained schools operating in Wales with a further three approved.

Generally, liability rests with the governing body rather than individual members. Individual members may however, be held liable in certain circumstances and schools are advised to take out insurance against these contingencies.

The instrument of government sets out in detail the circumstances in which members of the governing body should declare an interest and may be required to leave a meeting or will not be permitted to take part in a discussion or vote. The general principle is that no one should be involved in a decision where his or her own personal interests conflict with those of the school.

The article of government render a grant-maintained school accountable to the community it serves. It is required to publish a prospectus and annual report, hold an annual parents meeting, and make available non-confidential details of governors' meetings.

Grant-maintained schools are subject to the same citizens charter provisions and are required to provide the same performance data as their local education authority counterparts.

Orthopaedic Consultancies

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are his estimates for the number of orthopaedic consultant posts that will be required in Wales in 1994, 1995 and 1996.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not held centrally. Consultant expansion is a matter for employing bodies who should have regard to the health care needs of their local population.

Teacher Training

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the intake at each teacher training establishment in Wales for each year since 1990 together with the numbers who qualified as teachers from each establishment during the same period.

Sir Wyn Roberts [holding answer 14 July 1993]: As this information will be available shortly, I will write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he is to take to protect the interests of local government staff in the run up to local government reorganisation in Wales.

Mr. Redwood [pursuant to his reply, 8 June 1993, c. 218-19]: The chairman and members of the advisory committee on the staffing implications of local government reorganisation are to be:

Sir Richard Lloyd Jones KCB (Chairman)
Peter Anthony Bennett
David Hughes Davies DL
Michael Roger Towers

The appointments will take effect from 1 September 1993.

The members of the committee will be able to bring to bear their extensive experience of management and personnel issues, which has been gained at senior level in both tiers of local government and in the public and private sectors. I look forward to receiving their advice.

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about his proposals to delegate power to area committees as part of the reorganisation of local government in Wales; and to which areas of Wales it will apply.

Mr. Redwood: I am considering taking a power that would permit me to require shadow unitary authorities in certain specified circumstances to produce decentralisation schemes. Such schemes would set out their proposals for devolving responsibilities to area or shire committees. They would have to be produced in accordance with guidance prepared by my Department, and I would be empowered to approve and amend them.

This proposal builds upon the statement my predecessor made to the House on 1 March when he suggested that a structure of area committees, representing the existing district areas, might be the most appropriate form of internal organisation for the proposed Powys unitary authority, given that authority's size and population. Since that time, my colleagues and I have been considering how best to give effect to that suggestion.

I envisage that the power to require an authority to prepare a decentralisation scheme would be applied:

1. Where a specified number of members—probably 10—of the unitary authority had requested it; and
2. Where the Secretary of State was satisfied that a scheme was appropriate having regard to relevant geographic, cultural and demographic considerations.

Authorities would normally be expected to prepare schemes for areas based upon the present or former areas of principal councils.

Each area committee would have real decision-making powers over the functions delegated to it by the full council. While the full council would possess, as at present, a power to override committee decisions, this would be subject to a qualified majority vote of, say, 90 per cent. so that the whole council could not overturn an area committee's decision without the support of some members of that area committee. Delegated powers could be returned to the full council by agreement; likewise, further powers could be devolved to the area committee.

It would be for members of the unitary authorities in the first instance to suggest which functions to delegate. But they would decide which in the light of my guidance, and the decisions themselves would be subject to my powers of amendment. Normally, I would expect delegation to cover those aspects of a district's functions —for example, housing, environmental health, waste collection, local planning—that lend themselves to local administration, but some present county functions or particular elements of them could also be delegated.

The decentralisation scheme would need to set out the principles upon which resources were to be allocated. It would also have to provide for matters such as access to staff and equipment.

The power would be available for use in all 21 of the authorities proposed in the White Paper, Cm 2155. In practice, I do not envisage it being applied widely, but its availability would provide people from areas such as Montgomeryshire, Breconshire and Radnorshire with the assurance that their elected representatives will have substantial control over the administration of local services in their areas. It would not be available for individual towns and villages that currently are part of a larger district council area.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many movements of spent fuel of radioactive waste to Sellafield have resulted from the Magnox reprocessing programme to date.

Mr. Eggar: To date, more than 12,000 flasks of spent Magnox fuel have been delivered to Sellafield for reprocessing.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many and what range of movements of radioactive waste will arise in the lifetime of the operation of THORP if substitution is not permitted.

Mr. Eggar: British Nuclear Fuels plc estimates that, from the first 10 years of operating its thermal oxide reprocessing plant and assuming that waste substitution is not approved, some 3,300 containers of radioactive waste would have to be returned to its customers overseas. The quantities for subsequent years will depend upon BNFL's progress in securing additional orders for the plant.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what studies he has commissioned and which compare the viability of returning the intermediate-level wastes arising from the reprocessing of foreign nuclear fuel at the thermal oxide reprocessing plant for the customer countries rather than vitrified high-level waste.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 23 July 1993]: None.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if his Department has been consulted regarding the location of storage facilities for intermediate-level waste generated by reprocessing foreign spent fuel at the thermal oxide reprocessing plant, between the planned start-up of THORP and the beginning of operation of the planned Nirex repository; and if he will make it his policy not to include Dounreay in his consideration.

Mr. Eggar: BNFL's plans for intermediate level waste are to store it, following encapsulation, in purpose-built facilities at Sellafield until it is returned to the customer or disposed of as appropriate.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what storage facilities there are, or are planned, for intermediate-level wastes arising from the reprocessing of spent nuclear fuel at the thermal oxide reprocessing plant, between the planned start up of THORP and the beginning of operation of the planned Nirex repository; and if he will take this into account when considering approval of the principle of waste substitution.

Mr. Eggar: The provision of waste storage facilites at Sellafield is a matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc as operators of the site. All relevant factors will be taken into account in considering the company's proposal for waste substitution.

National Environmental Technology Centre

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade who has been appointed head of the National Enviornmental Technology Centre announced on 10 June, Official Report, column 303; and what is the formal relationship between the National Environmental Technology Centre and AEA Technology.

Mr. McLoughlin: An appointment has not yet been made. The National Environmental Technology Centre will form part of AEA Technology.

AEA Technology

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to make a grant from public funds to allow AEA Technology to reorganise its environmental functions so as to combine them with Warren Spring Laboratory.

Mr. McLoughlin: The National Environmental Technology Centre will be funded by fees from its customers, as the Warren Spring Laboratory has been. The AEA's agreed costs, in establishing the NETC, will be provided by my Department.

Japan

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the achievements and objectives of Her Majesty's Government's policy on trade with Japan.

Mr. Needham: Since the late 1980s, the Government have established a close, plain-speaking and positive relationship with Japan. In addition to the United Kingdom's welcome for overseas investment and the other advantages it offers, this has contributed to the United Kingdom being Japan's preferred investment partner in Europe. This investment represents over 40 per cent. of Japanese investment in the EC and has created more than 50,000 manufacturing jobs. Our export promotion campaigns, "Opportunity Japan" and "Priority Japan" have successfully encouraged United Kingdom firms to make inroads into the Japanese market. United Kingdom exports rose 75 per cent. to £2·63 billion in the period 1988-90 and have held up well—standing at £2·24 billion—compared with our major trading partners in the past two years, despite difficult economic conditions in Japan. The Japanese Government also assist United Kingdom companies who export to and invest in Japan.

Working with our European Community partners, we seek from the Japanese Government further measures to stimulate domestic demand in Japan and to increase her propensity to import. We also seek further practical assistance to new investors in and exporters to Japan and the removal of the remaining barriers which affect British business. Such barriers are few but very important for the industries concerned. My Department remains committed to increasing awareness of the immense business opportunities in Japan and to strengthening our industrial base by learning from best Japanese practice. To that end, we are working with United Kingdom industry through our Priority Japan campaign, Engineers to Japan scheme and other activities.

Economy, North-West

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the economy in the north-west region.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: In spite of intense international competition, the north-west has shown considerable resilience in recent years. Important modernisation and rationalisation have taken place and companies continue to win important contracts both at home and abroad ranging from hi-tech electronic goods to lozenge manufacturers. The region has increased its GDP by over 50 per cent. in five years, recording a figure of £50·3 billion in 1991, second only to the south-east within the United Kingdom. The north-west's stock of VAT-registered businesses increased by over 14 per cent. in the five years to 1991 while unemployment trends have been reversed with the seasonally-adjusted total being reduced by 9,700 in six months to June 1993.

There have been a number of favourable comments on the economic situation in recent months. The North West Chambers of Commerce in their 2nd quarter 1993 survey report have commented on a further strengthening of domestic sales and orders, especially for smaller companies, while claiming that the higher level of confidence achieved in the first quarter has been broadly maintained. The Invest in Britain Bureau's annual report indicates that 23 inward investment schemes are under way in the north-west involving over 3,300 associated jobs. These projects are from a number of countries including the USA, Japan and Germany.

Aerospace Companies

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what economic contributions aerospace companies make to the United Kingdom industrial production, investment, the balance of payments and corporation tax revenues.

Mr. Sainsbury: Output of the aeropace in 1990, in terms of gross domestic product at current factor cost, was £5,139 million or 4·9 per cent. of the output of the manufacturing industry as a whole. Net capital expenditure by the aerospace industry was £424 million in 1990. In 1990, aerospace accounted for 3 per cent. of net capital expenditure in manufacturing.

In 1992, the aerospace industry had a trade surplus of £2,340 million.

Separate data on corporation tax are not available for the aerospace industry. Classification of companies by industry for corporation tax is by summary trade classification within which aerospace companies are included with "other transport equipment manufacturers".

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to promote the aerospace industry in Clwyd.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department maintains a continuous dialogue with the aerospace industry on ways in which the Government can help. The British Aerospace Broughton site has received over £10 million of regional selective assistance and regional development grants. It has also benefited from the launch aid support for the Airbus Airbus A320 and A340.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what bearing his initiative in relation to cutting red tape has on the Data Protection Act 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: All regulations having an impact on business, which includes the Data Protection Act 1984, are being reviewed as part of the deregulation initiative.

Carbon Saving

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he has estimated the cost to British industry of implementing the measures announced to date for achieving a saving of 10 million tonnes of carbon, per annum.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply which she received from my hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside on 6 July 1993 at column 78.

My hon. Friend will also wish to note the statement on 16 March 1993 Official Report, column 183, by my right hon. Friend the Member for Kingston upon Thames (Mr. Lamont) that the measures which he was introducing to help meet our environmental commitments would do so in a way which does the least possible damage to the competitiveness to British industry; and that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment yesterday announced that the Government will be strengthening the Energy Efficiency Office's programmes of advice and information to help business make energy savings, as part of the Government's programme for meeting its international commitments for limiting carbon dioxide emissions.

Companies Act Investigations

Ms Mowlam: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many investigations under section 447 of the Companies Act 1985 are currently being undertaken by private contractors.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: As at 23 July 1993, 10 investigations involving 14 companies were being undertaken under section 447(3) of the Companies Act 1985 by competent persons other than officers of the Department.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government continue to help small businesses, through improvements to the business climate, through deregulation and through specific programmes and initiatives of suport and assistance.

Measures operated by my Department to assist small businesses include:

Business Link. The development of a national network of one-stop shops—to be known as business links—is a key component of the Government's strategy for small firms. Good progress is being made by the original six pilots, and they have now been joined by two more areas—Leicestershire and Shropshire. The first business links are expected to open in September. An assessment panel will meet quarterly, starting in October, to consider further proposals to set up business links. Eventually there should be a network of about 200 business links throughout the country, each one providing a single point of access to a wide range of high quality business information and advice and removing the confusion that is too often experienced by small firms seeking help.

Deregulation measures. The seven business task forces, created following the Prime Minister's seminar on deregulation on 2 February, are giving priority to the concerns of small businesses. Each task force has at least one representative from, or looking after the interests of, small firms. In addition, a sub-group has been set up, with membership drawn from all the task forces, to consider and make recommendations on issues which have a particular small business dimension.

The task forces have recommended that, when formulating new regulation, the interests of small firms should be the first consideration. Following the Prime Minister's deregulation progress meeting on 20 July it has been decided that this recommendation will be implemented by the introduction of a small firms 'litmus test' as part of the compliance cost assessment.

The Enterprise Initiative Consultancy Scheme. In the year ended March 1993, 23,082 applications were received and 14,375 were approved.

The consultancy scheme will continue until 31 March 1994 as scheduled. Beyond that, a new package of support, including a new diagnostic service, a consultancy brokerage scheme, new consultancy services and technology advice will be phased in alongside the consultancy scheme from 1994-95 onwards to ensure a smooth transition to the new arrangements. This comprehensive range of local services, contracted through TECs and delivered by TECs and business links will provide high quality support for business, be suited to business needs and make cost-effective use of public funds.

The Small Firms Merit Award for Research and Technology (SMART) scheme. Last year, 180 grants, the maximum number on offer, were made.

Support for Products Under Research (SPUR) which helps small firms develop new products and processes. In the 12 months to March 1993, 138 grants were offered, worth over £12 million.

EUREKA. Last year, the United Kingdom participated in 43 announced EUREKA projects, involving 107 organisations, including 33 small to medium sized enterprises. This year, the United Kingdom participated in 49 announced projects, involving 76 organisations, 28 of which were smaller companies.

The Loan Guarantee Scheme facilitates smaller firms' access to finance. In the 12 months to May 1993, 2,407 loans were guaranteed to a value of £51 million.

The terms of the scheme were enhanced in the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Budget statement. The changes, which were implemented in 1 July, are: the premium in the inner city task force and city challenge areas was reduced from 1 to 0·5 per cent. At the same time, premiums were reduced on all other loans, from 2·5 per cent. of the guaranteed portion of the loan to 1·5 per cent. for variable rate lending and 0·5 per cent for fixed rate lending on the whole loan; the maximum loan available for established businesses increased to £250,000;
the guarantee level increased to 85 per cent. for these businesses.

Informal investment demonstration projects. Five of these projects were established by TECs in partnership with other local organisations in January 1992 with Departmental pump-priming. They help together potential investors and small businesses seeking investment. An interim review of progress was carried out in early 1993 with favourable results.

Late Payment. The Department continues to address the difficult problem of late payment of commercial debt. Three trade association pilot initiatives have been established with financial support from the Department; we are monitoring the payment performance of Government Departments and my noble Friend Baroness Denton, Minister for Consumer Affairs and Small Firms, continues to follow up individual cases of late payment to small firms by large companies and public bodies. The Department has also endorsed the CBI's prompt payer's code.

The Department also issued a consultation paper on the 1992 Budget proposal to require large companies to state in their reports and accounts how quickly they pay. The responses to the consultation exercises are presently under consideration.

It is extremely difficult to measure the extent of late payment or the impact of any one measure and it is too soon to evaluate the results of the trade association initiatives. However, there are indications, most recently from the Association of British Factors and Discounters, that payment times in the United Kingdom are improving.

Export Promotion. My Department and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office provide, through Overseas Trade Services, a wide range of help, advice and support to United Kingdom exporters at each stage of the export process, from researching opportunities through to contacting and visiting markets. The services we offer are particularly geared to meet the needs of smaller firms. An independent monthly survey of the delivery of the services shows a consistently high level of customer satisfaction, and some 90 per cent. of respondents regularly say that they will use the services again. Details of the services and of their take-up are featured in the "British Overseas Trade Board Annual Report 1992-93 and Forward Plan"—a copy of which is in the Library.

GATT

Ms Short: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to urge the EC representatives involved in the negotiation of the GATT Uruguay round to ensure that any agreement on a multilateral trade organisation, (a) state unequivocally that existing international environmental treaties will not be liable to challenge using GATT rules and (b) states a clear commitment to promotion of sustainable development in the main body of the text.

Mr. Needham: As the GATT has no powers to challenge other international agreements, and does not seek such powers, such a statement is not required. Language on sustainable development is already incorporated in the draft text of the MTO preamble. The Commission has sought to strengthen this language and to annex a ministerial declaration on future trade and environment work to the Uruguay round final act.

Ms Short: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the terms of reference of the GATT working group on environmental measures and trade; how many times the group has met since 1971; what matters have been discussed at recent meetings; what reports have been produced; and what is the method by which Her Majesty's Government have input into the discussions at meetings of the group.

Mr. Needham: The formal terms of reference of the GATT group remain those under which it was established in November 1971. The group did not meet until 1991, but has met 11 times since then, to discuss three agenda items: the GATT's relationship to multilateral environmental agreements; transparency of environmental regulations; and packaging and labelling. The group is also discussing those elements of the follow-up to UNCED "Agenda 21" which fall to the GATT. The GATT secretariat has reported transactions of the meetings and has, at the group's request, produced background papers to facilitate discussion. Individual contracting parties have also tabled papers. The European Commission speaks for the Community in GATT. United Kingdom input is made in three ways: at Community co-ordinations in Geneva; in the article 113 committee in Brussels; and by informal contacts with the Commission.

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what quantity of HCFC 22 is purchased by his Department per annum.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information on the quantity of HCFC 22 purchased by the Department is not available.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the latest available figures for his Department's total purchase of CFCs and HCFCs.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information on the purchase of CFCs and HCFCs by the Department is not available.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many chlorofluorocarbons and hydrochlorofluorocarbons installations are contained within his Department's buildings.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department does not maintain central records of the number of its installations that contain CFC and HCFC.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which current uses of ozone-depleting chemicals by his Department are considered essential.

Mr. McLoughlin: Following the consultation exercise carried out by the Department of the Environment earlier this year, no decision has yet been taken on any applications by the United Kingdom under the terms of the Montreal protocol for continued production of ozone-depleting chemicals for essential use.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of his Department's consumption of ozone-depleting substances become controlled waste in terms of section 33 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. McLoughlin: All ozone-depleting substances that need to be disposed of are controlled waste under the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the quantity of ozone-depleting substances recycled within his Department and returned to the manufacturer.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information on the quantity of ozone-depleting substances returned to the manufacturer is not available. The Department's policy is to ensure that such substances are disposed of or recycled in an environmentally responsible way.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many catastrophic leaks of ozone-depleting substances have occured within Department buildings in the last five years.

Mr. McLoughlin: It is departmental policy to ensure that installations and equipment are properly maintained, in particular so to avoid catastrophic leaks of ozone-depleting substances. Detailed maintenance records are not kept centrally.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much funding has been allocated or spent to specifically deal with measures to reduce his Department's consumption of ozone-depleting substances.

Mr. McLoughlin: The objective of reducing the use of ozone-depleting substances is integrated into the Department's general purchasing decisions. Separate information on funding for specific measures is therefore not available.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how many chlorofluorocarbon domestic fridges are contained within his Department's buildings;

(2) if he will give an undertaking to purchase only ozone-friendly fridges that do not contain CFCs or HCFCs for his Department.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information on the number of CFC domestic fridges contained within the Department's buildings is not available. My Department will phase-out the use of refrigerators containing CFCs and HCFCs as soon as possible, taking into account value for money and all relevant environmental factors, including energy efficiency.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade by what date his Department's use of ozone-depleting chemicals will conform to EC regulations on limits on these chemicals.

Mr. McLoughlin: There are as yet no EC regulations limiting the use of ozone-depleting chemicals.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many portable halon fire extinguishers are contained within departmental buildings; and what measures are being taken to ensure their recycling and replacement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Portable halon fire extinguishers are replaced, when time-expired, with non-ozone depleting alternatives, in accordance with the Department's policy.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what action has been taken to ensure that ozone-destroying substances consumed by his Department are identified as controlled wastes when they are no longer in use;

(2) what measures have been taken to ensure that ozone-destroying substances in use by his Department identified as controlled waste under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 do not reach the atmosphere.

Mr. McLoughlin: My Department and its contractors take appropriate action to deal with the disposal of ozone-depleting substances used within departmental buildings in accordance with existing requirements. We also have the Department of the Environment's new guidance for procurement and accommodation staff, which instructs them to ensure that contractors comply with best practice in terms of professional guidance and relevant British standards.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many refrigeration and air conditioning systems in his Department are equipped with automatic leak detection systems.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information on the number of the Department's refrigeration and air conditioning systems that use automatic leak detection systems is not held centrally. However, the Department ensures that effective preventive monitoring and detection equipment is part of the maintenance regime.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what targets have been set for the recycling of ozone-depleting chemicals within departmental buildings.

Mr. McLoughlin: Although no specific targets have been set, the Department aims to recycle ozone-depleting chemicals as far as possible.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what guidance has been sought and received on alternatives or substitutes to the ozone-destroying chemicals in use by his Department.

Mr. McLoughlin: The purchasing policy of my Department has been informed by guidance from several sources. This includes the Department of the Environment's new guidance for procurement and accommodation staff, which instructs them to ensure that contractors comply with best practice in terms of professional guidance and relevant British standards. My Department has also published guidance on the replacement of ozone-depleting substances used in refrigeration and air conditioning, for fire extinguishing systems or as solvents.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will provide details from the maintenance and servicing record of the quantity and type of ozone-destroying chemicals used annually in his Department's refrigeration and air conditioning equipment for servicing and in leakages; and what proportion is removed for recycling.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information on the quantity and type of ozone-depleting chemicals used annually by the Department's refrigeration and air conditioning equipment for servicing and in leakages is not held centrally.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how his departmental Green Minister has promoted protection of the ozone layer with specific policy measures; which possible measures have been considered and rejected; and on what grounds.

Mr. McLoughlin: My Department subscribes to the Government's policy on protection of the ozone layer as reflected in the United Kingdom's existing commitments to phase-out production of some ozone-depleting substances and its participation in continuing international discussions to introduce wider controls.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he has taken to promote and assist the UKAEA's development into a profitable commercial research and development contractor.

Mr. Eggar: The Atomic Energy Authority is expected to meet objectives prescribed by the Government. The prime objective is to ensure that it competes effectively in its markets, develops its business to meet customers' needs and earns an acceptable return on its assets. Performance against these objectives is monitored on a regular basis. The AEA is also eligible to receive support under various export promotion and other schemes operated by my Department to assist British companies.

Nuclear Emergencies

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he has taken to meet his target to complete a strategy for information management on nuclear emergencies through his nuclear planning liaison group by November.

Mr. Eggar: Work on information management is continuing through the nuclear emergency planning liaison group and progress so far has been satisfactory.

Nuclear Industry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the report prepared by his Department on the options available to open up decommissioning and radioactive waste management operations to competition.

Mr. Eggar: The Government are concerned to ensure maximum cost-effectiveness in their expenditure on decommissioning and radioactive waste mangement operations. For new projects, the aim will be to put every contract out to competition unless there is a clear reason why this would not provide best value for money. We are also systematically reviewing projects currently under way to establish whether there is scope for increased competition.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will set out a breakdown of the allocation of expenditure to British Nuclear Fuels, waste management and decommissioning, respectively, under his departmental resource allocation in part 5 of his management information system for Ministers 1993 returns.

Mr. Eggar: The available information is published in MINIS 93, part 5: energy, the entry for atomic energy division.

European Energy Council

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he has taken to ensure discussions on nuclear matters in the European Energy Council are consistent with United Kingdom interest.

Mr. Eggar: Specific discussions on nuclear matters are infrequently held in the Energy Council. Whether debated there or in other Councils, the United Kingdom's line is decided only after full consultation with all interested home Departments.

EUREKA Programme

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has on the participation of United Kingdom companies in the Membrane project of the EUREKA programme.

Mr. McLoughlin: EU 5 ULTRAMEM, which is known as Membrane in France, is a completed EUREKA project in which there were no United Kingdom partners.

UKAEA

Mr. Brazier: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what objectives he has set for the new chairman of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority.

Mr. Eggar: I have set objectives for the new UKAEA Chairman, Sir Anthony Cleaver, as follows:

Introduction

I am writing to set the objectives I wish you to pursue as the Chairman of the AEA. These objectives set out the general direction in which the Government wishes you to take the AEA. Specific targets in support of these objectives will be set from time to time, after consultation with you. Nothing in these objectives over-rides your responsibilities as an Accounting Officer.

Statutory Framework

The AEA's activities are undertaken within the framework of the Atomic Energy Authority Acts 1954 and 1986, the Science and Technology Act 1965, and other relevant legislation.

Aims

The AEA has, with Government support, progressively sought to increase its competitiveness, cut costs, provide better value for money for its customers and increase profitability. Good progress has been made but the AEA is operating in increasingly competitive markets, both for the work which it undertakes for the Government and for other customers.

Within the statutory framework, your prime objective is to ensure that the AEA competes effectively in these markets, develops its business to meet the needs of its customers and, in doing so earns an acceptable return on its assets. To this end, you should ensure that the AEA has a structure and cost levels that secure these objectives and subject the AEA's support activities to market testing and contractorisation where appropriate. You should also ensure that the AEA has a clear market strategy and sufficient marketing and management expertise competent to deliver the objectives of that strategy. More generally you should continue the process of cultural change focusing the organisation on commercial success and recognising the key role that the development of staff has in this context.

Defined customer-contractor relations should apply to all work carried out by the AEA. As far as funding by the Department of Trade and Industry is concerned, this work will be in Programme Letters agreed with the Department or under contract and will be carried out in accordance with the terms and conditions contained in the Letters or contract. Subject to its statutory constraints the AEA should undertake work for customers, whether nuclear or non-nuclear, on the basis of an acceptable return after taking into account any related waste management and decommissioning costs and the overall needs of the business.

Within the framework of legislation and Government policy, you should ensure that the AEA explores all options for exploiting its technology, including collaboration with other organisations where this is commercially justified or where I indicate that there is a national interest in doing so. You should ensure that AEA informs the Department, at an early stage, of its plans for such collaboration. Consistent with the development of its competitive position and securing an appropriate return for its investment in R&D, I also expect the AEA to take every opportunity to facilitate the process of technology transfer particularly to small firms.

You should ensure that the AEA annually submits to the Department a Corporate Plan covering the Public Expenditure Survey period. This should contain Business Plans for the AEA as a whole and for each main business area. In particular the Plan should contain a clear strategy for reducing operating costs and identify those areas where increased resources (money, manpower, and research) are justified by prospects of future profitable business and those where effort should be reduced. The Plan should include a Capital Investment Memorandum setting out the AEA's capital expenditure proposals. It should also include contingency planning showing how the AEA would respond to different market out-turns to those assumed in the Plan.

Financial

The Government, whilst continuing to support the AEA in restructuring its operations, looks to the AEA to achieve returns that enable it to fund the costs of restructuring and make a return for the Exchequer.

I expect you to ensure that the financial target, as set by me from time to time after discussion with the AEA, is achieved.

I also expect you to ensure that the AEA stays within its External Financing Limit (EFL) as agreed from year to year and to surrender distributions of agreed sums from time to time to the Consolidated Fund.

Performance Targets

You should propose suitable measurable performance targets, including efficiency and quality of service targets, consistent with and complementary to the financial target for approval by the Department.

Safety

The AEA is subject to the safety requirements imposed on licensed operators by the Health and Safety Executive under the Nuclear Installations Act 1965. You should ensure that the AEA continues to have arrangements which secure at all times the highest standards in safety that are reasonably practicable in its day-to-day activities, in its decommissioning activities and in the management of radioactive waste.

Decommissioning and radioactive waste management

Decommissioning and radioactive waste management are substantial and important activities within the AEA's total sphere of operations. You should accordingly ensure that the AEA carries out its decommissioning and radioactive waste management responsibilities in the most cost effective way, consistent with safety and other requirements of the regulatory authorities.

Options for the future

I have recently set in hand a study to consider options for the future of the AEA, including the possibility of privatisation and have appointed consultants to advise me. I expect you to ensure that the AEA co-operates fully with my Department and its advisers in considering the range of options. You should also ensure that the AEA conducts its business in such a way which does not restrict those options.

Conclusion

This letter sets out the main strategic objectives for the term of your current appointment until decisions are taken on the future of the AEA. I expect to discuss each annual Corporate Plan with you, to review the AEA's achievements against the specific targets which have been set, and if necessary to set new targets in the light of this discussion and review. I will review these objectives once decisions have been reached on the future of the AEA.

Russia

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what joint ventures between British Nuclear Fuels and the Russian Ministry of Atomic Energy have been sanctioned by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Clothing and Textiles

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what assessment he has made of the effect on trade in clothing and textiles with the poorest third-world countries of the recent decision to lift quotas on clothing imports from countries of east and central Europe;

(2) what steps he has taken to remove trade barriers on clothing and textiles;

(3) what decisions taken at the G7 summit in Tokyo will improve the treatment of the poorest nations in the multi-fibre arrangement.

Mr. Needham: The Government have consistently worked for an early conclusion to the GATT Uruguay round of multilateral trade negotiations which would include the phasing out of the multi-fibre arrangement and of the associated quantitative restrictions maintained by the European Community and most other importing countries against exports of textiles and clothing from the main low-cost suppliers. The progress made in Tokyo on the Uruguay round in general has enabled multilateral negotiations to resume in Geneva and has greatly improved the prospects for a successful conclusions by the end of the year. As regards other trade barriers, the EC has recently concluded agreements with the Czech republic, Slovakia, Hungary, Romania and Bulgaria providing for restrictions on imports of textiles and clothing into the EC to be removed over a five to six-year period. The Government do not expect this process to have any implications for the poorest developing countries, most of which already enjoy unlimited duty-free access to the EC and are not subject to any quota restrictions.

Nuclear Reactor, Dounreay

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 13 July, Official Report, column 433, how the plutonium content of the final fuel loading of the prototype fast reactor at Dounreay is dependent upon the operational programme.

Mr. Eggar: The plutonium content of nuclear reactor fuel changes during operation as a result of nuclear reactions in the core. The amount of plutonium in the fuel of the prototype fast reactor at Dounreay when the reactor is shut down in 1994 will therefore depend on the reactor performance and also on the timing and extent of any refuelling that may be required.

Coal Bed Methane

Mr. Thomason: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the coal bed methane industry will be represented on the proposed energy advisory panel.

Mr. Eggar: I shall make an announcement about the composition of the panel in due course.

Mr. Thomason: To ask the President of the Board of Trade who will determine primacy of use for coal resources between coal mining and coal bed methane interests following coal privatisation; and what criteria will be used to determine primacy.

Mr. Eggar: The Government's consistent policy is to ensure the largest economically viable coal industry which the market can support in the long term. The Government also wish to encourage the development of coal bed methane as a potentially significant energy source. Both these factors are being taken into account in planning for privatisation.

Mr. Thomason: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if access in the future to the British Coal Corporation's geological data will be made available to the coal bed methane industry on a similar basis to that which oil and gas data is currently available to the industry.

Mr. Eggar: As indicated in the White Paper "The Prospects for Coal", Cm 2235, we propose to establish a new public sector body to be known as the Coal Authority, which will be responsible for licensing coal mining activity. The Coal Authority will be required to make available to potential licensees and other interested parties records of past, present and planned mining and geological information in its possession, subject to commercial confidentiality and any reasonable fee that may be charged.

Mr. Thomason: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what effect British Coal's claim to ownership of coal bed methane aborbed in coal has on the Department of Trade and Industry's right to issue exploration licences to companies intending to extract coal bed methane.

Mr. Eggar: None. The Petroleum (Production) Act, 1934, vests all petroleum in the Crown. For purposes of the Act the definition of petroleum includes any natural gas, such as methane, existing in its natural condition in strata. Exploration licences granted under the Petroleum (Production) Act, 1934, allow the licensees to search and bore for petroleum, and get petroleum in the course of exploration.

Mr. Thomason: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress was made at the recent meeting between his Department, the British Coal Corporation and the United Kingdom Onshore Operators Group towards resolving whether the corporation or the Crown owns coal bed methane absorbed in coal seams.

Mr. Eggar: My officials chaired a meeting on 15 June 1993 between British Coal and the United Kingdom Onshore Operators Group aimed at achieving greater understanding of the principles surrounding the entry into the coal seams and their occupation and use for the purpose of extraction of coal bed methane. I understand that both parties found the meeting useful and I hope that further progress in detailed negotiations between the two sides will now be possible. While reserving its position on ownership of coal bed methane, British Coal undertook at the meeting not to charge a production-related royalty for such methane, in order to help facilitate the development of the new industry.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many of the public bodies for which he is responsible hold meetings in public; and if he will list them.

Mr. Eggar: The President of the Board of Trade is responsible for about 45 public bodies. The information requested is not immediately available, but I will write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Sugar

Mr. Bayley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will update for each year for which the information is available the information listed in the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on sugar of 1987 on the proportion of United Kingdom sugar production by (a) British Sugar and (b) Tate and Lyle.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: More up-to-date information was provided in the 1991 Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the proposed merger between Tate and Lyle plc and British Sugar plc. This showed the following position:

The volume and value of United Kingdom sugar sales by supplier in 1988/89 with their respective market shares

	'000 tonnes	Per cent. share	£ million	Per cent. share
British Sugar	1,218·1	52·1	532·3	52·3
Tate and Lyle	944·0	40·4	427·1	41·9
Imports[1]	175·7	7·5	[2]68·2	6·7
Total	2,337·8	100·00	1,018·6	100·00

Information about later years is not publicly available.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Burden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what parts of each of the local government wards currently in effect in the city of Birmingham have not been designated as having development area status under the Assisted Area Order 1993.

Mr. Sainsbury: The designation of wards within travel-to-work areas as development areas or intermediate areas is based on wards as they existed for the decennial census of population in April 1981. This is necessary because these travel-to-work areas themselves are based on 1981 wards, and using wards defined at any other time, when their boundaries may not necessarily match those used to define the boundaries of travel-to-work areas, means that some of the areas intended for designation could inadvertently be counted twice, or missed out.

Birmingham is a case in point and by using the city's 1981 wards in the Assisted Areas Order 1993, development area status applies for the whole of the city of Birmingham. However, on examination, I think the Assisted Areas Order 1993, is not sufficiently clear on this point and I have therefore made and laid an amending order to clarify the position. I shall write to the hon. Member further about the position in Birmingham, and to other hon. Members representing areas where designations for parts of travel-to-work areas have been based on wards.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with his Irish counterpart on the subject of Merseyside's application for objective 1 status within the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Government's proposal of objective 1 status for Merseyside was approved by the Council in Brussels on 20 July. I did not discuss it bilaterally with the Government of the Republic of Ireland, but I hope that the European structural funds will in future contribute appropriately to the development of links between what will now be two neighbouring objective 1 regions.

Nuclear Electric

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations have been received by his Department concerning Nuclear Electric and the Simpkin partnership; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The hon. Member has written to DTI Ministers and asked several parliamentary questions. No other representations have been received.

Coal Mines

Mr. Dicks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with British Coal on the subject of the removal of machinery from the pits which British Coal is currently offering for license to the private sector.

Mr. Eggar: Under the Coal Industry Nationalisation Act 1946, matters such as the deployment of machinery are operational matters for British Coal, and the Government are not given powers to intervene. My Department has however kept in close touch with British Coal, and I have raised the matter on a number of occasions with the chairman of the corporation. He has given me assurances that no equipment with be redeployed unnecessarily, that each decision to salvage major equipment will be taken on the basis of all relevant economic and operational criteria, and in particular that British Coal is prepared to give details of the destination of any major items of machinery which it removes. It is up to British Coal to justify each such decision.

Market Testing

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those functions in his Department which have been subject to market testing; and in how many cases, an in-house bid was (a) made and (b) awarded.

Mr. Eggar: A full list of market tests to be undertaken in my Department in the period ending September 1993 was published in "The Citizen's Charter, First Report: 1992", Cm 2101. Although there have been instances of contracting out of some of these services for policy or management reasons, only one case of formal market testing against internal provision has so far been completed. In that particular case, an in-house bid was made and was successful.

Consultants

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list, for the last three financial years, the contracts of more than £10,000 in value awarded to outside consultants by his Department; what was the purpose of each contract; and whether each contract awarded was subject to competitive tendering.

Mr. Eggar: It is my Department's policy to apply competitive tendering procedures to consultancy contracts. The individual contract information requested cannot be provided other than at disproportionate cost.

Tying-in Arrangements

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps are being taken to implement the tying-in provisions, sections 104 to 107 of the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990; and when they will be implemented.

Mr. McLoughlin: Following wide consultation over proposals to implement these provisions, the Government are considering how best to proceed.

EC Structural Funds

Sir John Hannam: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what will be the financial allocations for the three United Kingdom regions designated for objective 1 of the EC structural funds.

Mr. Sainsbury: During the Foreign Affairs Council meeting on 20 July, it was agreed that the objective 1 financial allocation for the United Kingdom for the period 1994-99 should be 2,430 million ecu at 1992 prices. The Government have decided to distribute this allocation as follows: Northern Ireland 1,270 mecu, Merseyside 840 mecu and the Scottish Highlands and Islands 320 mecu.

Fur Trade

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many companies are involved in tanning of fur skins; and how many employees they have.

Mr. Sainsbury: This information is available only for the whole of the leather—tanning and dressing—and fellmongery industries. In 1991, there were 180 businesses with 6,500 employees, including working proprietors.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how many (a) mink pelts and (b) Arctic fox pelts from British mink farms were exported in each year since 1988; and what was their value;

(2) how many British red fox pelts were exported in each year since 1988; and what was their value.

Mr. Needham: Official statistics do not distinguish between mink produced by British farms and re-exports, or between various species of fox. The available information is given in the table.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many retail businesses were involved in the fur trade; and how many employees they had for each of the past five years.

Mr. Sainsbury: The number of retail businesses classified as furriers is as follows:

	Numbers
1989	114
1990	93
1991	79
1992	57

Information for earlier years on employment and the number of businesses is not available.

Mr. Sainsbury: This information is not available.

Payment of Bills

Sir Roger Moate: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of bills are paid on time by Government Departments.

Mr. McLoughlin: During the financial year 1992-93, major purchasing Departments and agencies undertook sample surveys to determine the percentage of invoices paid within the agreed credit period, or within 30 days where no credit period has been set. Government Departments reported results in the range 75 to 100 per cent.

Waste Recycling

Sir Roger Moate: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what role he foresees for business in recovering waste for recycling.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and I have today announced a new initiative to encourage industry and commerce to play a greater role in reducing the amount of waste which has to be disposed of through landfill, including by establishing systems to recover and reuse waste materials whenever it is practicable and environmentally advantageous to do so. I intend to continue the dialogue which has already begun with different sectors of industry and commerce producing products which eventually become waste, such as tyres, batteries, vehicles and electronic equipment, to determine how our objective can best be put into effect in these and other areas.

An important plank in our policy is the need to maintain and develop our existing recycling infrastructure, on which many jobs depend. This is currently threatened by surplus of waste materials generated as a result of recycling policies elsewhere in Europe. We are looking to all the sectors concerned in our initiative to help counter this threat. In addition, our policies will create new opportunities and jobs—in collecting, sorting and processing materials for reuse and recycling. I intend to explore with companies how Britain can best capitalise on this growing market area.

Pit Licences

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information British Coal is providing to potential licensees of the pits it has offered for licensing to the private sector.

Mr. Eggar: I understand that those expressing interest in pits which British Coal has offered for licensing to the private sector have been provided by British Coal with an initial information pack setting out a brief description of the colliery and detailed information on the licensing process. At the next stage, potential licensees who submit a bond are able to visit the pits, are provided with an information memorandum setting out detailed information about the colliery and have access to source documents in a data room. Much of this detailed information is commercially confidential. However, I am placing in the Library a list provided by British Coal of the contents of the information memoranda and data rooms, together with a copy of the initial information pack.

Telephone Bills

Mr. Richards: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he will be making regulations enabling the Director General of Telecommunications to determine billing disputes.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Competition and Service (Utilities) Act 1992 included provisions giving my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade the power to make regulations enabling the Director General of Telecommunications to determine disputes about bills for certain telephone services.

However, there have been important developments which have led me to reconsider the need to make the regulations at the present time.

BT sends out some 100 million bills each year. The number of complaints about billing disputes made to the Office of Telecommunications—Oftel—and the Scottish and Welsh telecommunications advisory committees has fallen from 12,778 in 1991 to 6,892 in 1992 and Oftel expects its figure to fall further in 1993. The reduction in complaints involving BT's customers appears to be due to a number of factors, including the modernisation of BT's network, which has resulted in itemised bills now being available on 90 per cent of its lines;call barring, which enables the customer to bar premium rate services and is now available on some 65 per cent. of its lines;a network security study carried out by BT which has resulted in improved security, detection and investigation techniques;the launching by BT of a new customer care service based on freefone numbers—BT is also in the process of agreeing improved procedures for dealing with complaints with the director general under the powers of the Competition and Service (Utilities) Act 1992;BT is also carrying out trials for introducing itemisation for calls below 50p, monthly billing and credit limits on usage.

In addition, BT has recently announced that it will be introducing "opting-in" for adult premium rate services through the use of personal identification numbers from July next year. This welcome action, together with the other measures detailed in my answer, should lead to an even greater reduction in the number of billing disputes.

In the light of the action which BT has taken and in the expectation of further reductions in the level of complaints about telephone bills to Oftel, I have decided not to proceed to make the regulations at the present time. I do, however, attach importance to continued improvements and I will want to look closely at this again in a year's time.

West Cumbria Development Agency

Mr. Salmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the relationship between the West Lakes Development Agency and British Nuclear Fuels; if he will define the role of the agency; and how much ERDF funding it received in each year since 1988.

Mr. Eggar: There is no such organisation as the West Lakes Development Agency. The West Cumbria Development Agency has the objectives of attracting investment to the area, creating and sustaining employment there and helping local businesses become more competitive. I understand that British Nuclear Fuels plc, which is a member of the agency, has contributed just over £1 million each year to the West Cumbria Development Fund Ltd which provides financial support for the agency. In addition, the agency receives funding from a number of public and private sector organisations. The European regional development fund contributed £270,000 in 1990-91 towards business support measures.

Nuclear Accidents

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what preparations he has made for United Kingdom participation in the diplomatic conference on third party liability on nuclear accidents; and when he expects the conference to be held.

Mr. Eggar: My officials are taking an active part in the negotiations being held in the International Atomic Energy Agency's standing committee on liability for nuclear damage. The director general of the IAEA has not yet proposed a date for a diplomatic conference.

Deregulation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Harrogate (Mr. Banks) of 7 July, Official Report, column 151, if he will make a statement on the matters reported upon to date by the deregulation task forces; and what decisions Her Majesty's Government have taken to implement deregulation proposals.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's reply to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 26 July, at columns 561-63.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to be able to announce those regulatory and administrative burdens upon business which will be abolished by his forthcoming Bill on deregulation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: We propose to introduce a Bill including measures arising from the work of the business task forces and departmental reviews of regulations as soon as parliamentary time permits.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement indicating the principles upon which his forthcoming deregulation Bill will be based; and if he intends to ensure that this proposed legislation fully addresses the need fundamentally to enhance and encourage the international competitiveness of British industry.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: A key objective of the Government's deregulation initiative is to simplify existing regulations in order to remove unnecessary burdens on business and any proposed legislation would reflect this objective. The need to enhance and encourage the international competitiveness of British industry is a main aim of the Department and will certainly be taken fully into account.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many times the deregulation unit has met since its inception; and if he will publish the notes of the meetings and of the Prime Minister's seminars of 2 February and 20 July.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 23 July 1993]: The deregulation unit is a division of my Department and does not maintain a record of the number of meetings it has held. The seven deregulation task forces have held 105 meetings among themselves and over 40 meetings with Government Departments, but have not produced formal notes of meetings. For the outcome of the Prime Minister's meetings on 2 February and 20 July, I refer the hon. Member to the Prime Minister's reply of Thursday 4 February 1993, Official Report, column 470 and to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on Monday 26 July, at columns 561-63.

Innovation Budget

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was his Department's innovation budget for each of the last three financial years, and for 1993-94.

Mr. McLoughlin: Expenditure under the innovation budget of the Department of Trade and Industry for the last three financial years, and forecast expenditure for 1993-94, are as follows:

£ million

Outturn		Forecast (gross)
1990-91	1991-92	1992-93	1993-94
82·3	102·7	137·4	124·7

British Gas

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to receive the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on British Gas; when he intends to make a response; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission is due to make its reports on gas to my right hon. Friend the President of the Board and to the Director General of Gas Supply by 30 July. I shall wait to see the reports before coming to a view on the timetable for any response.

Office of Gas Supply

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the term of office of the present Director General of Ofgas ends; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Sir James McKinnon's second term of office as Director General of Gas Supply expires in August 1994. Earlier this year, Sir James announced his intention to retire on 31 October 1993. We have, therefore, initiated the process of identifying a successor and an announcement will be made in due course.

Competitiveness Assessment

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement setting out the arrangements which he intends to adopt to fulfil his commitment that the impact upon the international competitiveness of British companies, particularly small companies, will be asssessed prior to the introduction of future legislation or regulations; what steps he intends to take to involve representatives of industry in the on-going assessment of that impact; and if he will make it his policy to publish the results of that assessment alongside the assessment of public service manpower and finance requirements currently included in the explanatory memoranda attached to Government Bills and orders.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The potential impact on the international competitiveness of British companies, including small firms, is a factor taken into account in all Government policies. Industry will be consulted in an appropriate manner in each case in the framing and implementation of new legislation. The Government are committed to the publication of compliance cost assessments for all new proposals for legislation which impact on business.

EC Perifra Programme

Dr. David Clark: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins), of 4 November 1992, Official Report, columns 315-16, how much EC funding was made available under the Perifra scheme to each of the eight projects that were approved on 7 August 1992; and how much direct funding was made available to each project by (a) local authorities, (b) Hertfordshire training and enterprise council, (c) the Royal British Legion and (d) the Government.

SMART and SPUR

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the distribution between the regions and nations of the number and value of small firms merit award for research and technology and support for products under research projects; what has been the amount of committed spending so far; and what is the length of processing time from submission of applications to approval.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 26 July 1993]: SMART—small firms merit award for research and technology—is an annual competition with a closing date for entries. Winners are announced three months later. The number and value of awards made within the current programme, which commenced in 1992, and expenditure to 30 June 1993 are as follows:

Pharmaceuticals

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the present export guidelines for (a) anthrax vaccine and (b) penicillin.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 26 July 1993]: The Export of Goods (Control) Order 1992, as amended, controls the export of certain isolated live cultures in the form of vaccines, including bacillus anthracis. As such, an export licence is required. There is no similar control on the export of penicillin.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what restrictions exist for the export of raw materials for the production of medicine to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 26 July 1993]: All exports of humanitarian aid to Serbia or Montenegro must be licensed by the Department of Trade and Industry and accompanied by a letter of authorisation from the United Nations sanctions committee.

The UN sanctions committee automatically agrees to the export of finished medicines to Serbia and Montenegro. The export of medical raw materials and precursors is considered on a case-by-case basis.

Environmental Technology

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the environmental technology innovation scheme and the environmental management options scheme were open for applications; when they were closed to further applications; and how many applications had been received subsequent to closure.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 26 July 1993]: The environmental technology innovation scheme—ETIS—jointly managed by the Department of Trade and Industry and the Department of the Environment and DTI's environmental management options scheme—DEMOS—were both launched on 2 October 1990. The schemes are open to new applications until 30 September 1993. However, since February this year the Departments have informed new applicants that projects already under assessment are expected to take up the remaining resources of each scheme. Since that time, nine ETIS and eight DEMOS applications have been received.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many applications were made, grants awarded and how much expenditure committed, in each region and nation and for the United Kingdom, on (a) the environmental technology innovation scheme, (b) the environmental management options scheme and (c) EUROENVIRON, together with in each case the average and target processing cycles from application to award.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 26 July 1993]: The average processing time for approved projects under the three schemes was as follows:

	Months
ETIS	11·5
DEMOS	12·4
EUROENVIRON	4·3

These processing times include periods when responses were awaited from applicants to supply information necessary to complete assessment of their project proposals by the Department concerned. The processing times for ETIS and DEMOS include the initial outline application stage. We will be taking account of the results of an interim evaluation carried out on the three schemes last year in the design of any successor programmes.

British Coal Directors

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the declarations of interests of directors of the British Coal Corporation notified to him since 1983.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 26 July 1993]: No.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what guidelines are laid down when appointing directors of the British Coal Corporation about the declaration of pecuniary interests; how long they have been in existence; and what plans there are to revise them.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 22 July 1993]: The appointments of British Coal Corporation members are subject to the provisions of the Coal Industry Nationalisation (National Coal Board) Regulations 1946.

Regulation 3 in essence requires members:

a) to disclose to my right hon. Friend full particulars of any interest or securities held or acquired in any undertaking carrying on a business similar to that at any time carried on by the Corporation; and

b) to disclose at a meeting of the Members of the Corporation any direct or indirect interest in a contract made or proposed by the Corporation.

I have no present plans to revise those regulations.

Patent Office

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which categories of work at the Patent Office are (a) currently being market tested and (b) being considered for future market testing.

Mr. McLoughlin: The current programme which is nearing completion, having entered the consultation phase, includes reprographics, messenger and post dispatch services, file repository, stationery, trade marks data capture and trade marks referencing. Market testing will be applied in due course to other Patent Office work, but no decisions have been taken on the content of next year's programme.

SCOTLAND

Councillors (Salaries)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has had in respect of the payment of salaries to local government representatives in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Council membership is based on the principle of voluntary public service and is not regarded as a salaried appointment. All payments to members of local authorities are by way of allowances and travel and subsistence. A new system of councillors' allowances was introduced in April 1991. The Convention of Scottish Local Authorities' comments on the first year's operation of the new system are currently being considered in the wider context of local government reform and the consultation paper on the review of internal management of local authorities, the responses to which are currently being analysed. A number of local authorities have expressed their views separately and these will also be taken into account in the review of allowances.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) whether home helps will be able to stand in elections to any new single-tier local authorities proposed in his White Paper on the reform of Scottish local government;

(2) if he will make a statement on disqualification from standing for elections to the new councils proposed in the White Paper on the reform of Scottish local government.

Mr. Stewart: The question of the eligibility of local authority employees to stand for election to the authority which employs them was among the issues considered in our recent consultation paper "The Internal Management of Local Authorities in Scotland". Responses to this paper are currently being analysed and a decision on this issue will be taken in the light of these.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the written remit of the review of local government in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: The Government's first consultation paper on local government reform in Scotland, issued in June 1991, set out the principles on which the new system should be based. These included the need for the new system to reflect local loyalties and allegiances, to be efficient, accountable to its electorate and cost-effective.

The principles were widely endorsed by those who responded to the consultation paper and formed the basis for the local government structure proposed in the White Paper published by my right hon. Friend on 8 July.

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what powers he has to prevent asset stripping by a district council prior to a reorganisation of local government;

(2) if he will make a statement on the powers the Commissioner for Local Government has to investigate complaints of discrimination made by residents within a district council;

(3) what statutes govern the holding by a district council of a referendum in all or part of its area;

(4) what powers he has to change a capital programme, submitted by a district council, to ensure that the programme is not discriminatory against a particular geographical area;

(5) what plans he has to provide that in a referendum organised by a district council prominence is given by that council to all viewpoints on the isue of the referendum;

(6) what powers he has to prevent a district coucil discriminating against residents in part of its area;

(7) what requirements are imposed on district councils on the conduct of referendums.

Mr. Stewart: The issues raised by the hon. Member are serious and important and I shall write to him as soon as possible.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland who has made representations to him concerning the transfer of Chryston, Stepps and the Moodiesburn ward from Strathkelvin in the proposed East Dunbartonshire to the proposed Lanarkshire, North; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 23 July 1993]: I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is his estimate of the final cost of the consultation processes with regard to both local government reorganisation and changes to the water and sewerage services in Scotland;

(2) what plans he has to bring forward his proposals for local government reorganisation in a separate Bill from the one containing his proposals for water and sewerage services;

(3) when he expects to be able to bring forward legislation to implement the White Paper on local government reorganisation;

(4) what plans he has to establish an executive body to operate the Glasgow underground following local government reorganisation;

(5) what assessment he has made of the financial consequences of local government reorganisation for the operation of the Land Register.

Mr. Lang: I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what consideration was given to the establishment of an independent commission to examine the reorganisation of Scottish local government; what representations he received advocating that such a commission be established; what assessment was made of the costs of establishing such a commission; on what basis he decided not to establish such a commission; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will meet the regional council directors of planning to discuss the implications for planning services arising from the reorganisation of Scottish local government; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what evidence he has considered in assessing the level of voter satisfaction with the existing structure of local government in Scotland; what steps he has taken in order to determine the level of voter satisfaction with that structure; what further steps he intends to take to determine the level of voter satisfaction with that structure, and if he will make a statement;

(5) what assessment he has made as part of the reorganisation of Scottish local government of the optimum authority size necessary to ensure adequate service provision; and if he will make a statement;

(6) what evidence he has considered in assessing the extent to which the electorate identify with the existing councils in their locality; and if he will make a statement;

(7) if he will meet the regional council directors of transport to discuss the implications for transport services arising from the reorganisation of Scottish local government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will estimate the cost to each regional, district and island authority of the task of local government reorganisation;

(2) if he will publish details of the specific criteria used to determine the boundaries of each of the proposed new single-tier authorities; and if he will list the key criteria for each individual authority;

(3) what is his estimate of (a) the number of anticipated redundancies and (b) the cost of redundancy payments resulting from the anticipated job losses associated with his local government reorganisation proposals; and if he will break these figures down for each regional, district and island authority;

(4) if he will meet the regional council directors of education to discuss the implications for the provision of education services arising out of the reorganisation of Scottish local government; and if he will make a statement;

(9) if he will meet the regional council directors of social work to discuss the implications for social work services arising out of the reorganisation of Scottish local government; and if he will make a statement;

(10) if he will list the names of those respondents expressing concern about the possibility of local government reorganisation jeopardising future funding for voluntary organisations; and if he will provide a geographical breakdown of this information by regional, district and island authority area;

(11) if he will produce a list of the organisations referred to by those respondents referring to links with other bodies and identify which respondents referred to links with which body; and if he will provide a geographical breakdown of this information by regional, district and island authority area;

Training Schemes

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each local enterprise company in Scotland its youth training performance in 1992-93 showing (a) the cost per output points and (b) the number of national vocational qualifications per 100 leavers, together with the latest information he has for 1993-94 and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each LEC in Scotland their employment training performance in 1992-93 showing (a) the cost per output point, (b) the number of NVQs per 100 leavers and (c) the number of positive outcomes per 100 leavers, together with the latest information he has for 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: In Scotland the responsibility for monitoring local enterprise company performance on employment training, and on its successor training for work, rests with Scottish Enterprise and with Highlands and Islands Enterprise. I have therefore asked the chairmen of these bodies to write to the hon. Member.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Stewart: The Government continue to place a high priority on helping small businesses, through improvements to the busniness climate, through deregulation and through specific programmes of support and assistance.

Small businesses are of crucial importance to the Scottish economy and are continuing to benefit from the comprehensive schemes of support which the Government have introduced. My Department has overall responsibility for assisting small firms in Scotland while specific schemes are delivered mainly through Scottish Enterprise, Highlands and Islands Enterprise and the network of 22 local enterprise companies. In addition to providing services specific to Scotland, these bodies also have responsibility for the delivery and monitoring in Scotland of United Kingdom services on behalf of other Departments including the Department of Trade and Industry. Measures operated directly by my Department to assist small business include the regional enterprise grant for investment, regional enterprise grant for innovation and regional selective assistance.

For the period 1992-93, my Department made 102 offers of regional selective assistance to the value of over £18·2 million to small companies—those employing fewer than 200. This contributed to the creation of 2,320 planned new jobs and the safeguarding of 480 existing jobs. Under both the investment and innovation elements of the regional enterprise grant scheme, 272 offers to the value of £3.5 million were made in Scotland in 1992-93 to companies employing under 25 people, contributing to the creation of 1,060 planned new jobs and the safeguarding of 940 existing jobs.

The success of these and other Government policies is demonstrated by statistics for VAT registration. A total of 9,800 additional companies registered for VAT in 1980. In 1991, the comparable figure was 13,900, an increase of 42 per cent. At the end of 1991, the total number of VAT-registered businesses in Scotland was 118,000 an increase of 24,600 or 26 per cent. on the comparable figure for 1979.

Empty Housing

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many local authority-owned houses were empty at the last date for which figures were available; what information he has on the length of time they had been vacant; what is his estimate of the rent forgone for each local authority during the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Details of the numbers of vacant local authority dwellings at 31 March 1992, together with information on the length of time which they had been vacant, are shown at table 17 of the Scottish Office Statistical Bulletin (Housing Series) No. Hsg/1992/8. Rental income lost by each local authority because of unlet dwellings in 1992-93 is shown in table 7 of the Scottish Office Statistical Bulletin (Housing Series) No. Hsg/1993/5. Both bulletins are available in the House of Commons Library.

Computer Consultancies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all the computer consultancies employed by his Department and agencies, since November 1991, the tasks for which they were engaged, and the total cost to his Department.

Mr. Lang: I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Blind and Partially Sighted People

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what arrangements his Department makes to ensure that blind and partially sighted people have access to information produced by his Department where it has not been published in alternative media such as Braille, large print or tape;

(2) what is his Department's policy on which information produced by his Department is published in alternative media to standard print such as Braille, tape or large print.

Mr. Stewart: The Scottish Office targets information in an appropriate manner to those who have an interest. Each constituent Department within the Scottish Office determines how best to publish and disseminate the information which it produces. Consideration is consistently given to whether a need exists for a publication to be reproduced in Braille or tape format.

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were registered blind and partially sighted in each year since 1985; and what figures are projected for registrations in (a) five and (b) 10 years time.

Mr. Stewart: The number of people reported by local authorities as registered blind and partially sighted at 31 March of each year is as follows:

Year	Blind	Partially sighted
1985	12,738	3,586
1986	13,710	4,008
1987	13,678	4,479
1988	13,760	4,651
1989	14,088	4,834
1990	14,120	5,012
1991	14,552	5,237
1992	19,506	6,210

The increase between 1991 and 1992 is due to revised figures received from Strathclyde region. It is not possible to project future registrations in (a) five and (b) 10 years time.

Mr. Lang: Whether or not the Transfer of Undertaking (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 apply in any particular case will depend on the nature of the work awarded and the contractors' own proposals for carrying out the work. Since publication of the "Competing for Quality" White Paper, the Scottish Office's market testing programme has included the activities listed which have been contracted out under contractual arrangements which did not incorporate the TUPE regulations.

Dounreay

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the radiological consequences of the spillage of plutonium at the AEA Technology plant at Dounreay on 29 June; and when his Department first learned of the incident.

Mr. Stewart: On the morning of 30 June the Atomic Energy Authority reported to my Department that two workers at Dounreay had been contaminated following the opening of a drum which contained centrifuge filter bodies in sealed bags. Subsequent reports indicated that detailed checks had been carried out to determine whether there had been any intake of material by personnel either directly involved in the operation or nearby. As a result, early analysis suggested that one worker would be subject to further checks in order to determine the precise level of material ingested. Two other workers were confirmed as having received significantly less exposure. The cause of the incident is being investigated by the Atomic Energy Authority and the nuclear installations inspectorate.

Sight Tests

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the estimated savings made in 1992-93 in Scotland as a result of the introduction of a charge for sight tests.

Mr. Stewart: We estimate that the savings made in 1992-93 as a result of the restriction of the categories of people eligible for an NHS sight test in 1989 were of the order of £9 million.

Veterinary Services

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what alterations he plans to make to the operation of the Highlands and Islands veterinary services scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: These plans are at present being finalised, and we hope to put firm proposals to those concerned shortly.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The landscaping work on the two roundabouts at the Edinburgh airport interchange is being undertaken by Lothians and Edinburgh Enterprise Ltd.

I understand the costs are being met in full by the Enterprise Company. The Scottish Office, as one of the two road authorities affected, has been consulted during design and construction and satisfied itself as to the safety of the proposal before consenting to the work.

My hon. and learned Friend may find it helpful to contact the local enterprise company direct should he wish to discuss the matter. The enterprise company would be happy to discuss the project and to provide any further details he may require about it.

Mr. Lang: Crown counsel have considered an interim report from the procurator fiscal. They expect to receive a further report in due course.

Laboratory Services

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many general practitioner fund-holding practices have chosen to use non-accredited laboratory services; and if he will provide a breakdown by regional health authority.

Mr. Stewart: This information is not available centrally.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total level of gross expenditure in Scotland for 1988-89 to 1992-93 and the estimated gross expenditure for 1993-94 on fund holding for general practitioners; what was the component assigned to laboratory services at constant prices; and if he will provide a breakdown by regional health authority.

Mr. Stewart: There were no operational fund holders in Scotland prior to 1991-92. In that year, gross expenditure by general practitioner fund holders was £8·19 million.

Details of gross expenditure for 1992-93 are not yet available as the audit of annual accounts for that period has not yet been completed. Estimates of gross expenditure for 1993-94 cannot be given at this stage due to the possibility of further fund holders joining the scheme in mid year. Information on the element of this gross expenditure assigned to laboratory services is not available centrally.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what powers he has, and what further steps he is taking, to enforce quality standards on laboratory services in line with the recommendations provided by the Scottish Home and Health Department to regional health authorities; and if he will make a statement;

Mr. Stewart: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial allocations he has made to health boards for general practitioners fund holding for laboratory services at constant prices for 1993-94; and if he will provide a breakdown by regional health authority.

Mr. Stewart: The allocation of financial hospital and community health services, including laboratory services, to fund-holding general practices is a matter for the relevant health board. This finance comes from their general allocation for hospital and community health services.

No information on the portion of the fund holder's allocation from the board attributable to laboratory services is available centrally.

Sir Hector Monro: I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what extension he has approved to the notional life of Scottish Nuclear's advanced gas-cooled reactor power stations; and what effect this extension will have on the annual provisions made by Scottish Nuclear to fund decommissioning and other nuclear liabilities.

Mr. Stewart: It is the responsibility of Scottish Nuclear to take a view on the notional life of its power stations, and to satisfy the nuclear installations inspectorate regarding safety and other licensing requirements. The effect of the extension to the notional life of Torness power station is to increase the time over which the company make charges against revenue in order to accumulate the provisions necessary to meet future liabilities; this has the effect of reducing the annual charge.

Fishing

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what response has been made to the report and representations made by the chairman of the Sea Fish Industry Authority to the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro), regarding the outcome of a recent seminar held in Inverness on the subject of several orders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Astronomy

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with learned body authorities about the agreements on astronomy involving the United States of America, Canada, Chile, other south American countries and the United Kingdom relating to the Gemini project of two optical infra red telescopes, one in the Nauna Kec site in Hawaii, and the other in Sierra Paon in Chile.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None. The proposal is an inter-agency agreement involving participation by the Science and Engineering research council. The research councils are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress he has made in the process of the appointment of an Astronomer Royal for Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how the spent fuel emplaced in the proposed Torness dry store is to be managed and disposed of after the planned period of storage.

Mr. Stewart: A public inquiry into the proposed dry store at Torness has been held. The reporter has not yet produced his report of that inquiry. Meantime, I understand from evidence led by Scottish Nuclear at the inquiry that no decision has yet been taken on the proposed longer-term management and disposal of the spent fuel.

Health Expenditure

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total gross allocation to Scotland for health expenditure in the year 1993-94; and if he will publish a breakdown of (a) the revenue and capital allocation components of the gross total, (b) of the final allocation for practice team staff and premises and (c) the total gross allocation, the revenue and capital components of it and the final allocation for practice team staff and premises for each of the regional health authorities.

Mr. Stewart: The total gross allocation to Scotland for health expenditure in the year 1993-94 is £3,923 million comprising £3,754 million revenue and £169 million capital. The final allocation for practice team staff and premises will be £58·8 million. The total gross allocation, the revenue and capital components of it and the allocation to date for practice team staff and premises for each health board is as follows:

£ million

Health board	Revenue	Capital	Practice team staff and premises	Total
Argyll and Clyde	204·0	13·5	4·1	221·6
Ayrshire and Arran	161·7	1·6	3·3	167·1

State Hospital	12·3	4·1	—	16·4
Total	2,478·5	119·7	56·6	2,654·8

The remaining £1,268·2 million is mainly for expenditure on family health services but also on centrally financed and other specific services. These costs are met as they arise during the year.

Caledonian MacBrayne

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the future organisation of Caledonian MacBrayne.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer which I gave to him on 10 June 1993 at column 277.

Scottish Nuclear

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how the guarantees made to Scottish Nuclear under schedule 12 to the Electricity Act 1989 are reflected in (a) Scottish Nuclear's accounts and (b) public sector accounts.

Mr. Stewart: The treatment of the guarantees made to Scottish Nuclear under schedule 12 to the Electricity Act 1989 are described in notes 4 and 15 to Scottish Nuclear's annual report and accounts for 1992-93. As far as public sector accounts are concerned, the schedule 12 guarantee is treated as a contingent liability.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make public the detailed engineering and economic assessment of the relative merits of dry storage and reprocessing made by Scottish Nuclear in 1991, with the removal of commercially sensitive material if necessary.

Mr. Stewart: Scottish Nuclear provided engineering assessments of the proposed dry storage at Torness at the recent public inquiry into the proposal. The company also made statements at the inquiry about the economic cases for dry storage as opposed to reprocessing. This will be reflected in the report of the public inquiry. Any more detailed economic assessment would be commercially confidential.

Public Bodies

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 15 July, Official Report, columns 647-48, whether his Department maintains a register of the interests of chairpersons or board members of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department.

Mr. Lang: No.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many of the public bodies for which he is responsible hold meetings in public; and if he will list them.

Mr. Lang: The Local Government (Scotland) Act 1973 as amended by the Local Government (Access to Information) Act 1985 does not apply to any of the non-departmental public bodies for which I am responsible. Non-departmental public bodies are not required to hold meetings in public and do not normally do so. Health boards are covered by the Public Bodies (Admission to Meetings) Act 1960. NHS trusts are not covered by the Act, but are required to hold one public meeting each year.

Racially Motivated Incidents

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will consider the monitoring and reporting of racially motivated incidents and crimes on the same basis as in England and Wales.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Quangos

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) former hon. Members of this House, (b) former Members of the European Parliament, (c) candidates at any parliamentary election since 1983 and (d) spouses of hon. Members, Members of the European Parliament, former hon. Members of Parliament or former Members of the European Parliament who have been appointed since January 1987 by his Department to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, health boards or NHS hospital trusts; and if he will list in each case the title of the post, the salary, the duration of the appointment and the party which each former Member, former MEP, or candidate represented.

Mr. Lang: The information held centrally by my Department does not show whether appointees were former hon. Members of this House, former Members of the European Parliament, candidates at any parliamentary election or the spouse of an hon. Member, former hon. Member or former Member of the European Parliament. As far as I am aware, the only appointee to a Scottish Office body listed in the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies" who is the spouse of an hon. Member of the House is Mrs. Kathleen Dalyell, wife of the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell). She is a member of the Ancient Monuments Board for Scotland and her appointment runs from 1 June 1992 to 31 December 1996; it is unsalaried. Mrs. Deirdre Hutton, wife of the former MEP for the South of Scotland, is a member of the Parole Board for Scotland. Her appointment runs from 1 June 1993. It is unsalaried, but a fee is paid.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the names of individuals who (a) are spouses of hon. Members, (b) are members of the House of Lords, (c) are spouses of members of the House of Lords and (d) have been party candidates for Parliament, indicating for which party, who have been appointed since 1987 to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, giving in each case the title of the post, any salary payable and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 26 July 1993]:] The information covers the Scottish Office bodies listed in the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies". The information is at 1 September 1992 and does not include appointments as justices of the peace, appointments to children's panels or appointments which expired before that date, details of which are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The information on appointments which I make is as follows:

(a) Mrs. Kathleen Dalyell, wife of the hon. Member for Linlithgow, is, as far as I am aware, the only spouse of a Member of the House who currently holds an appointment to a Scottish Office non-departmental public body. She is a member of the Ancient Monuments Board for Scotland and her present appointment commenced on 1 June 1992 and runs to 31 December 1996; Mrs. Joan Mackenzie, widow of the former hon. Member for Rutherglen, is a member of the Greater Glasgow health board. Her appointment runs from 1 April 1993 to 31 March 1997. Health board members receive remuneration of £5,000 per annum.

(b) the following members of the House of Lords hold appointments on Scottish Office bodies: Lord Macfarlane of Bearsden is a member of the board of trustees of the National Galleries of Scotland; his appointment runs from 1 April 1990 to 31 March 1994. The right hon. the Lord Cameron of Lochbroom is a member of the Edinburgh new town conservation committee; his appointment runs from 1 February 1991 to 31 January 1996. Lord Goold is a member of the Scottish hospital endowment research trust; his appointment runs from 1 April 1990 to 31 March 1996. Viscount Thurso is a member of the Central Advisory Committee on Justices of the Peace (Scotland). His appointment runs from 30 May 1991 to 15 May 1995. The Earl of Crawford and Balcarres is chairman of the board of trustees of the National Library of Scotland. The appointment runs from 14 November 1990. Baroness Carnegy of Lour was a member of the Scottish Economic Council until 31 January 1993.

Until his death recently, the Marquess of Bute was chairman of the trustees of the National Museums of Scotland. All the above appointments are or were unsalaried;

(c) the only spouse of a member of the House of Lords holding appointment to a Scottish Office body is Lady Sanderson, wife of Lord Sanderson of Bowden, who is a member of Borders health board. Health board members receive remuneration of £5,000 per annum.

(d) since information on the political affiliations of appointees is not held centrally, I have no record of appointees who may have been parliamentary candidates.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the former hon. Members of the House who have been appointed since 1987 to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations; and if he will list in each case the title of the post, the salary, the duration of the appointment and the party which each represented as an hon. Member.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 26 July 1993]: No former Members of Parliament who ceased to be Members of the House in 1987 and 1992 currently hold appointments on bodies for which my Department has responsibility.

The information held centrally by my Department does not show whether appointees were Members of this House during earlier Parliaments.

Royal Artillery Range, Balivanich

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what evaluation he has made of the survey by Highlands and Islands Enterprise of the economic impact of the Royal Artillery range in Balivanich upon the Western Isles economy; and if he will commission a similar survey of the social and economic impact of closure of the range.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The survey by Highlands and Islands Enterprise which was carried out with the full co-operation of the Army confirmed the important role which the Royal Artillery range Hebrides plays in the economic and social structure of the islands of Benbecula and North and South Uist. There are at present no plans to commission further studies.

Forestry

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to ensure that public access will be maintained to any forests which may be privatised.

Sir Hector Monro: I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 1 July to the hon. Member for Glanford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Morley), Official Report, column 611, whether the environmental policies referred to include environmental and recreational benefits in the Forestry Commission estate.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 26 July 1993]: I shall write to my hon. Friend and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will invite the Forestry Commission to produce a national forestry strategy combining the principles of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development with domestic forestry policy.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 26 July 1993]: Shortly after the Earth summit, the Prime Minister announced the Government's decision to publish a national plan for the implementation of the statement of forest principles agreed at Rio. The plan will cover both domestic forestry policy and the United Kingdom's interests in forestry overseas. It is being prepared by the Forestry Commission with the assistance of the other departments whose responsibilities are affected.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what area of woodlands and forests presently owned and managed by the Forestry Commission and not designated as a site of special scientific interest or national nature reserve is subject to management for nature conservation benefits by Forestry Enterprise.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 26 July 1993]: The Forestry Commission manages all its forests and woodlands to enhance their nature conservation value.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list the criteria which are relevant in determining whether or not a forestry scheme requires an environmental assessment;

(2) if he will instruct the forestry authority to seek environmental assessments for forestry schemes on sites adjacent to or in the vicinity of sites of special scientific interest; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 26 July 1993]: The criteria for determining whether the Forestry Commissioners should require an environmental assessment are set out in the Environmental Assessment (Afforestation) Regulations 1988, a copy of which is held in the Library.

Under the regulations, the commissioners already have the power to require an environmental assessment for an afforestation scheme adjacent to or in the vicinity of sites of special scientific interest if in their view the scheme is likely to have significant adverse effects on the environment.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, by county, those forest areas in Scotland currently available for sale to the private sector.

Sir Hector Monro: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and arrange for a copy of my letter to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much Forestry Commission land has been placed on the market for sale during the past 10 years but has not in the event been sold; and what is his estimate of the value of this land.

Sir Hector Monro: I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Rating

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether rateable values have been harmonised to bring Scotland into line with England and Wales; and if he will provide details.

Mr. Stewart: I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list those types of hereditaments where assessment of rateable values has not been harmonised to bring Scotland into line with rateable values in England;

(2) what powers he has to give direction to assessors in Scotland as to the assessment of the hereditaments for rating purposes; and what exercise has been made of such powers.

Mr. Stewart: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he expects to receive following the 1995 revaluation in respect of (a) hotels, (b) chemical plants, (c) fabrication yards and (d) airports.

Mr. Stewart: I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Housing Associations

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of housing association tenants were in receipt of housing benefits in each year since 1987 in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 July 1993]: This information is not collected centrally.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps have been taken to provide in Scotland funding equivalent to that provided in England under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 5 July 1993]: Scottish needs have been taken into account in setting the level of aggregate external finance given to local authorities.

Laser Treatment

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) to what extent laser treatment of the eyeball to restore normal vision is available within the NHS in Scotland; and what plans he has to provide the service universally;

(2) what estimate he has made of the (a) capital and (b) revenue cost of providing laser treatment of eyeballs in each health board area.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 19 July 1993]: I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Colorectal Surgery

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list the average waiting time for routine colorectal surgery at each hospital where it is offered; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what measures he is taking to ensure that waiting times for colorectal surgery are within guidelines promised by the patients charter.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 19 July 1993]: I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Waiting Lists

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he intends to use to ensure that waiting lists do not grow for medical treatments that have been identified as efficient by health boards.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 19 July 1993]: I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Patients

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he is taking to ensure that patients are given firm advance notice of the date when routine surgical procedures are to be carried out.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 19 July 1993]: I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Patients (Transport)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice or guidelines he has given to NHS trusts concerning specifications of contracts for ambulance services and transport services for patients and the minimum levels of training and skills required for such personnel.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 26 July 1993]: None. The ambulance and transport services for patients provided to NHS trusts in Scotland are covered by service level agreements with the Scottish ambulance service. These agreements specify standards of service and training of personnel.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many NHS trusts have one or more contracts with private operators for ambulance or patient transport services.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 26 July 1993]: None.

Council Tax

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is his latest estimate of the number of band D equivalents in each council tax band in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland as a whole; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is his latest estimate of the total number in each council tax band in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland as a whole of (i) dwellings, (ii) exempt dwellings, (iii) chargeable dwellings which are subject to a disabled reduction, (iv) chargeable dwellings which are entitled to a single discount for the purposes of council tax, (v) chargeable dwellings which are entitled to two discounts for the purposes of council tax and (vi) total equivalent number of dwellings after discount exemptions and disabled relief; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what is his latest estimate of the number of dwellings on the valuation list in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland as a whole; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 26 July 1993]: The available information is set out in the table. Updated estimates will be available in the autumn. These will give, for the first time, information, by band, on numbers of exempt dwellings, dwellings which are subject to disabled reduction, and dwellings receiving single discounts and two discounts.

	Strathclyde		Scotland

Total		956,152	842,621	2,156,917	1,961,432

The number of dwellings expressed is determined by multiplying the number of dwellings in the band by the ratio of the tax proportion for the band to the proportion for band D.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many 16 and 17-year-olds in (a) the Greenock travel-to-work area, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole are currently without a job, a place in higher education or a place on a training scheme.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 26 July 1993]: This information is not available in the form requested. The table shows the numbers of young people aged 17 and under who are unemployed and claiming benefit at employment service offices as at April 1993 in the Greenock travel-to-work area, Strathclyde and Scotland:

Notes:

1. Paediatric specialties include medical paediatrics, surgical paediatrics and community child health.
2. Information collected centrally records only the main specialty of a doctor. No information is therefore available on the number of doctors who work in paediatrics but for whom this specialty constitutes an area of 'special interest' (second specialty).

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many vacant posts of consultant paediatricians have been notified by each of the health boards in each of the past five years; on average how long it takes to fill such posts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 26 July 1993]: Information on vacant posts is available centrally only if an established post has been vacant for a period of at least six months during the year ending 30 September. For the years ending September 1989 to September 1992, only one such vacancy for consultant paediatrician was notified; it was in Greater Glasgow health board in the year ending 30 September 1991. No information is available centrally for the year ending 30 September 1988.

Midwifery

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of (a) female and (b) male midwifery staff, full-time and part-time, employed by each of the health boards in each of the past six years.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 26 July 1993]: The available information is shown in the tables and includes staff working in hospitals and in the community; community staff whose combined duties cover midwifery are also included. Midwives on senior nurse or teaching grades cannot be identified by specialty and are therefore not included.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We did not accede to any treaty in 1992.

India

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he is making to the Government of India to provide immediate free access to India without conditions to reputable international human rights organisations to investigate human rights violations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have been urging the Indian Government for some time to allow access by human rights organisations. We therefore welcome the recent decision of the Indian Government to allow certain human rights organisations to visit India and hope that such visits will take place in the near future.

EC Committee of the Regions

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will detail the criteria used in deciding the allocation of membership throughout the United Kingdom for the Committee of the Regions;

(2) if he will detail the mechanisms to be observed for nomination and designation of membership of the European Community Committee of the Regions;

(3) if he will list the number of members to be allocated to the European Committee of the Regions for (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Scotland and (d) Northern Ireland.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Of the 24 United Kingdom seats on the Committee of the Regions, 14 will be allocated to England, five to Scotland, three to Wales and two to Northern Ireland. This allocation will best meet the objectives for the Committee of the Regions, as set out in the treaty on European union.

Nominations for England will be handled by the Secretary of State for the Environment and, for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, by the respective Secretaries of State.

Northern Cyprus

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what records are kept of hon. Members who have visited northern Cyprus in the course of the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: There is no attempt at systematic or exhaustive monitoring of the movements of hon. Members.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice he gives to hon. Members or delegations of hon. Members from the United Kingdom who visit Cyprus as to the advisability of visiting the occupied area of northern Cyprus during their visit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: As a courtesy to visiting parliamentarians, our high commissioner in Nicosia offers to arrange appointments with members of either Cypriot Community or both. It is our policy to maintain contacts with both communities.

Immigration

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a decision is to be taken on the application made by Mrs. Jahan Ara Khan—Ref: IMM/B5808—at the post at Islamabad to join her husband in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In the absence of any information about this case, I have asked the high commission in Islamabad for a full report. I shall arrange for the hon. Member to receive a substantive reply from the migration and visa correspondence unit of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office as soon as possible.

EC Economic and Social Committee

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what nominations he has made to the European Community Economic and Social Committee to fill the vacancies which occurred during 1992.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Candidates have been selected to fill the vacancies which occurred last year and a further vacancy this year. The candidates have been informed of their nomination. Their details will shortly be passed to the Council secretariat for formal approval by the Council of Ministers.

Recess Dates

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to which of the legislatures of the G7 countries operate a system of fixed recess dates.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Canada, France, Germany, Japan and the United States agree recess dates annually, but have a provision to extend or recall the legislature to meet urgent needs as required.

Westminster Foundation for Democracy

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of the annual report of the Westminster Foundation for Democracy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Copies of the foundation's first annual report were placed in the Library today.

In its first 13 months, with funding of £1·2 million, the foundation supported about 140 projects in 32 countries, ranging from the provision of an adviser to the President of Albania to the training of Russian ex-army officers as social workers. The average cost of each project was £13,500. We welcome the diversity of the foundation's projects, and its commitment to continuous improvement in the already high degree of their cost-effectiveness.

THORP

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what international representations Her Majesty's Government have received from non-governmental organisations and individuals regarding potential proliferation and safety risks posed by the thermal oxide reprocessing plant facility at Sellafield.

Mr. Yeo: I have been asked to reply.

Many of the responses from outside the United Kingdom to the public consultation on the draft authorisations for the Sellafield site mentioned these issues.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what international security factors are to be taken into account in Her Majesty's Government's consideration of whether or not to commission the thermal oxide reprocessing plant for the manufacture of commercial domestic plutonium for sale in world markets.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In accordance with the House of Commons resolution of 28 June, Her Majesty's Governemnt has confidence in the non-proliferation arrangements that underlie THORP's work for overseas customers. Such arrangements include our obligations and those of our customers under the non-proliferation treaty and the nuclear suppliers group guidelines. We would allow the export of plutonium from reprocessing only if we had received satisfactory assurances that it would be used only for peaceful, non-explosive purposes.

All shipments of plutonium from the United Kingdom will meet international requirements on safety, physical protection and safeguards for such exports.

Secret Intelligence Service

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a brochure on the Secret Intelligence Service along the lines of the brochure recently published on the Security Service.

Mr. Hurd: Legislation will be brought forward during this Parliament to put the Secret Intelligence Service and GCHQ on a statutory footing. I cannot yet say what information we will make available on these agencies.

Croatia

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in what circumstances her Majesty's Government will agree to the imposition of sanctions against the republic of Croatia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will consult EC Foreign Ministers with a view to the imposition of full economic and diplomatic sanctions against the republic of Croatia;

(2) what effect action by the Croatian army against neighbouring states will have on diplomatic recognition and economic assistance to the republic of Croatia;

(3) if Her Majesty's Government will sponsor a United Nations Security Council resolution leading to full economic and diplomatic sanctions against the republic of Croatia forthwith; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: European Community Foreign Ministers agreed on 19 July to consider the withdrawal of Croatia's preferential trade benefits with the Community in the light of Croatia's involvement in the conflict in Bosnia. Further measures against Croatia have not been ruled out, but are not at present under consideration.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received from the United Nations of the presence of brigades of the regular Croatian army in the republic of Bosnia-Herzegovina; and whether such action will be treated as aggression by one state against another for the purpose of United Nations rules.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There is evidence that Croatian Government forces are engaged in the conflict in Bosnia. European Community Foreign Ministers agreed on 19 July to consider the withdrawal of Croatian preferential trade benefits with the Community in the light of Croatia's involvement in the conflict in Bosnia.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to raise with the German Foreign Minister the question of future sanctions against Croatia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs discussed Croatia with Herr Kinkel on 15 July as well as during the meeting of EC Foreign Ministers in Brussels on 19 July. The subject is likely to arise again when he is next in touch with Herr Kinkel.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the extent to which the republic of Croatia has met the requirements set by the London conference; and what steps Her Majesty's Government intend to take to ensure that these obligations are met.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friend the Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby, (Mr. Wareing) on 16 July, Official Report, column 688.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations were made by Herr Klaus Kinkel, German Foreign Minister, at the EC meeting of Foreign Ministers on 19 July in relation to Croatia and economic and diplomatic sanctions.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The question whether to withdraw the preferential trading benefits that Croatia enjoys with the European Community was discussed by all Foreign Ministers, including Herr Kinkel. It was agreed to consider the withdrawal of these benefits in the light of Croatian Government involvement in the fighting in Bosnia.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Croatian Government regarding the deportation by Bosnian-Croat forces of Bosnian Muslims to third nations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No specific representations have been made. We have made repeatedly clear to the Croatian Government that they must use their influence with the Bosnian Croats to press for an end to the fighting and to prevent further atrocities, including forced movement of populations.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what plans Her Majesty's Government have made to take action against the republic of Croatia in the event of its continuing aggression against Bosnia-Herzegovina; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if Her Majesty's Government will oppose the imposition of sanctions against the republic of Croatia in the absence of a change of policy by the Croatian Government towards Bosnia-Herzegovina and the Bosnian Croats; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The international community continues to watch closely for further evidence of the involvement of Croatian Government forces in the fighting in Bosnia. Our policy will continue to be influenced by such reports. As Heads of Government at the Group of Seven summit in Tokyo on 7 to 9 July made clear, stronger measures against Croatia and Serbia cannot be excluded.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to summon the Croatian ambassador or to send a demand to Zagreb in respect of Croatian army invasion of a neighbouring sovereign state.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have repeatedly raised with the Croatian authorities their involvement in the conflict in Bosnia, most recently on 21 July, when the Belgian Foreign Minister, Mr. Claes, as European Community President, saw President Tudjman in Zagreb.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has had from UN sources on joint action by Croatian Government and Bosnian Croat forces to displace Bosnian Muslims from around Mostar and the establishment of transit camps; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There is evidence that Croatian Government forces are providing active support in Bosnia for the Bosnian Croat forces, including in the Mostar area.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees regarding possible assistance by the Croatian Government in the forced deportation of Bosnian Muslims from Bosnia-Herzegovina; what requests have been made by Bosnian-Croat and Croatian Government officials to the UNHCR requesting assistance facilitating the deportation of Muslims from Bosnia-Herzegovina; and if he will publish the UNHCR's response.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No reports have been received from the UNHCR to date. But the UNHCR has undertaken to write to Her Majesty's Government detailing any such requests she has received. A copy of their letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the requirements for (a) the removal of sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and (b) the imposition of sanctions against the republic of Croatia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The conditions to be fulfilled by Serbia and Montenegro in order for sanctions to be lifted are spelt out in the relevant Security Council resolutions. There are no specific requirements for the imposition of sanctions, which must be judged in the light of circumstances. With respect to the possible imposition of sanctions on Croatia, European Community Foreign Ministers agreed on 19 July to consider the withdrawal of Croatia's preferential trade benefits with the Community in the light of Croatia's involvement in the conflict in Bosnia.

Armenia

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the extent of the implementation by the republic of Armenia of the CSCE agreement calling for a 60-day ceasefire in Nagorno-Karabakh, and the withdrawal of Armenian troops from Kelbadjn in Azerbaijan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: President Ter-Petrossian of Armenia has expressed his support for the CSCE plan and his willingness to co-operate both with the CSCE and the authorities in Baku to bring about its immediate implementation. Leaders of the local Armenian forces in Nagorno-Karabakh have also agreed to the plan in principle. We have, however, noted with concern that local Armenian forces have apparently attacked and captured Agdam, which is Azerbaijani territory with an exclusively Azeri population. We deplore this escalation of the fighting. We have made clear that the CSCE plan must be implemented as soon as possible.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will make representations to the Government of the Republic of Armenia over the continued military attacks on Agdam and surrounding areas in violation of the recently signed ceasefire agreement negotiated by the CSCE.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are disturbed by reports that local Armenian forces in Nagorno-Karabakh have taken advantage of the political uncertainty in Azerbaijan to launch a series of attacks. We note with concern that they have now apparently occupied Agdam, which is Azerbaijani territory with an exclusively Azeri population. We deplore this escalation of the fighting. We have made clear that fighting around Agdam, and elsewhere in and around Nagorno-Karabakh, must cease and that the CSCE peace plan must be implemented as soon as possible.

Israel

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his German counterparts on the Arab trade boycott of Israel; and what plans he has for such discussions in the future.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The boycott was discussed with G7 colleagues, including the Germans, at the Tokyo summit, and the political declaration included a statement calling for its end. We have no plans to discuss this further with German colleagues.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what legislative plans he has to prevent United Kingdom companies from complying with the Arab trade boycott of Israel.

Mr. Needham: I have been asked to reply.

Her Majesty's Government have no plans for the introduction of legislation on the Arab boycott of Israel.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Warley, West (Mr. Spellar) of 16 July, Official Report, column 725, what his Department (a) has done and (b) intends to do in relation to Israel's membership of the Asian regional group at the United Nations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have made our views clear on this issue, and will continue to do so.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will support Israel's admission to PREPCOM of the Organisation for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons, in the Hague; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Israel is already a member of the preparatory commission of the Organisation for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons—OPCW—in The Hague. We welcome Israel's signature of the chemical weapons convention and participation in the OPCW PREPCOM. We are working with Israel and other signatory states for the speedy and effective implementation of the convention.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his Department (a) has done and (b) intends to do in ensuring the Arab states maintain their commitment to abandon the Arab trade boycott of Israel.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Under the United Kingdom presidency, the EC initiated a demarche to Arab States urging them to lift the boycott. We continue to urge them to do so.

Bosnia

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 19 July, Official Report, column 18, whether previous investigations into allegations of rape as a tool of war in Bosnia-Herzegovina applied equally to such crimes committed by members of all groups involved in the conflict.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Investigations carried out by a range of non-governmental and international organisations and special missions into sexual abuse of women in the Bosnian conflict indicate that such abuse has been carried out by combatants from all parties to the conflict.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 19 July, Official Report, column 18, what steps he has taken to collect information on rapes by (a) Muslim forces, (b) Croat forces and (c) Serbian forces in Bosnia-Herzegovina; what are his sources of information; what steps have been taken to ensure the objective collation of evidence, regardless of the ethnic origin of either the perpetrator or the victim; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is collecting substantial information about breaches of international humanitarian law, including information about rape, committed by all parties to the conflict in former Yugoslavia, for submission to the United Nations commission of experts in Geneva. The information collected has come from a variety of sources including non-governmental organisations, the media and individual witnesses.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 19 July, Official Report, column 18, if he regards existing investigations into rape as a tool of war in Bosnia-Herzegovina as having given an accurate picture of this practice, regardless of the ethnic origin of either the perpetrator or victim.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A number of international and non-governmental organisations and special investigative missions, such as the EC mission led by Dame Anne Warburton, have reported on the abuse of women in the Yugoslav conflict. We believe that these reports provide an accurate picture of the situation.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what information Her Majesty's Government received on the role of Sefer Halilovic, newly appointed commander of the Bosnian Muslim army in his previous commission as a JNA officer leading Yugoslav army units engaged in the siege and destruction of Vukovar;

(2) what information he has as to the identity of the commander of the Bosnian Muslim army; and when this information became available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The newly appointed commander of the Bosnian Muslim army is Rasim Delic; Sefer Halilovic was the previous commander.

Maastricht

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give an estimate of the cost to date to public funds of preparing and representing in the courts Her Majesty's Government's case in relation to the Maastricht treaty.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The court hearing on the application for judicial review began on 26 July. It is not possible at this stage to give an accurate estimate of the costs of preparing the Government's case.

Nagorno-Karabakh

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current efforts by the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe to secure a renewed ceasefire in and around Nagorno-Karabakh and the response of the various parties to these endeavours.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The chairman of the CSCE Minsk conference, Mario Raffaelli, visited the region from 9 to 13 July. Both President Ter-Petrossian of Armenia and acting President Aliev of Azerbaijan expressed support for the early implementation of the CSCE plan and willingness to co-operate with each other. Mr. Raffaelli also paid his first visit to Stepanakert where the local leaders have agreed to the plan in principle. This is, however, at odds with recent reports that local Armenian forces have attacked and apparently captured Agdam, which is Azerbaijani territory with an exclusively Azeri population.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many of the public bodies for which he is responsible hold meetings in public; and if he will list them.

Mr. Goodlad: None.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 6 July, Official Report, columns 87-88, whether his Department maintains a register of the interests declared by chairpersons and board members of executive non-departmental public bodies, available for public inspection at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office or at the main offices of the various bodies.

Mr. Goodlad: No. But the Commonwealth Development Corporation publishes information on board members' interests, if any, in its annual accounts.

United Nations

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many new members have been admitted to the United Nations over the past 18 months; how many remain excluded from a regional group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Twenty-five new members have been admitted to the United Nations since the beginning of 1991. Five of these states—Estonia, Slovenia, Tajikistan, Uzbekistan and the former Yugoslav republic of Macedonia—have not yet joined a regional group. We would expect them to join the geographically most appropriate group in each case in due course.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council held on 19 and 20 July.

Mr. Hurd: I attended the Foreign Affairs Council on 19 July with the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) and my right hon. Friend the Minister for Trade.

In a debate in open session on the presidency's programme, EC colleagues echoed my emphasis on the need to pursue the Edinburgh and Copenhagen initiatives to increase growth, jobs and competitiveness.

The Council adopted six new regulations governing the structural funds. Agreement was also reached on financial allocations for member states' objective 1 regions. The United Kingdom will receive 2·43 becu for the period 1994-99 for its objective 1 regions—Northern Ireland, the highlands and islands of Scotland and Merseyside.

The Council discussed the Commission's draft directive to extend the franchise for European parliamentary elections. Several member states, including the United Kingdom, criticised the draft for being too detailed. The presidency recommended a light directive for the 1994 elections. A revised text will be considered by the October FAC.

The Presidency updated the Council on its discussions with the European Parliament on a new inter-institutional agreement on budget discipline to implement the Edinburgh financial perspective.

Over lunch, Lord Owen briefed Ministers on the latest situation on the ground in ex-Yugoslavia, and on the co-chairmen's continued efforts to identify proposals for a settlement that all three parties could accept. Ministers agreed that the presidency should visit the region as soon as possible in July to underline the EC's support for the co-chairmen. Serbia would be told that their present position remained unacceptable and that sanctions would be maintained, Croatia would be warned that the EC was seriously considering withdrawing Croatia's preferential EC trade access and the Muslims would be encouraged to negotiate. Ministers emphasised the importance of the rigorous implementation of sanctions and the maintenance of humanitarian aid.

Ministers set preparations in hand for consideration of the French proposal for a stability pact with central and eastern Europe. They also briefly discussed recent events in Somalia.

The Commission presented its opinions on the applications of Malta and Cyprus to join the Community. The Council welcomed the Commission's positive messages on Maltese and Cypriot eligibility and European vocation, and asked COREPER to examine the opinions so as to enable the FAC to take a position on the Commission's recommendations at its next meeting in October.

The Council briefly discussed a draft regulation on the control of exports of certain dual-use goods and technologies, and asked COREPER to prepare for further discussion in October.

The Commission reported on the GATT Uruguay round negotiations. The Council welcomed the progress at the Tokyo summit and the resumption of multilateral negotiations in Geneva. At France's request, the presidency will examine the possibility of a joint Council of Foreign Affairs and Agriculture Ministers in September to consider the agricultural aspects of the negotiations. The Council also discussed the anti-dumping and countervailing duties imposed by the United States on imports of EC steel. The Commission will determine what further action should be taken in the light of the International Trade Commission's findings which will be announced on 27 July.

The Council agreed to the conclusion of an EC trade and co-operation agreement, financial protocol and transport agreement with Slovenia.

The Council adopted measures to implement decisions of the 21 to 22 June Copenhagen European Council accelerating trade access to Community markets for the central European associate countries—Poland, Hungary, Czech Republic, Bulgaria, Romania and Slovakia. The Council also adopted a new regulation to extend the provision of EC technical assistance to the former Soviet Union until the end of 1995.

The Council discussed a Commission proposal to increase Stabex expenditure for 1993, a proposal which the United Kingdom could not accept. The Council asked COREPEPER to consider the issue further.

The presidency and the Commission reported to the Council on the 7 to 9 July G7 summit in Tokyo, and on the 6 July EC/Japan summit.

An EC-Tunisia Co-operation Council was held in the margins, and Ministers discussed European parliamentary commission issues, including events in the former Yugoslavia, with the Tunisian Foreign Minister over dinner. No formal votes were taken.

Sudan

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards Sudan; and what representations they are making to the Government of Sudan in relation to this policy.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have many concerns. Chief among them is the failure to settle the civil war in the south, the continuing humanitarian crisis in many parts of the country and persistent reports of human rights abuses. We take every suitable opportunity to raise these issues with the Government of Sudan, both bilaterally, and with our EC partners and other donor states. A key role is played by Her Majesty's ambassador to Sudan, Mr. Peter Streams, who has tackled skilfully the difficult task of conveying our concerns directly to the authorities in Khartoum. Indeed, Mr. Streams has shown a high degreee of professionalism and competence in carrying out his duties in a testing environment.

Iraq

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the agreement reached between Mr. Ekeus as special representative for the United Nations Security Council and the Iraqi government on 22 July in regard to implementation of UN Security Council resolutions in Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Security Council members, including the United Kingdom, have expressed support for Mr. Ekeus' actions. The Security Council, and UNSCOM, will continue to press for sustained Iraqi implementation of the relevant Security Council resolutions.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Low Pay

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 28 October 1992, Official Report, column 736, if he will give the average equivalised income at April 1993 prices for the poorest 20 per cent. of individuals in households of families with children, excluding and including free school meals, both before and after housing costs.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is in the table. All information is presented according to households below average incomes conventions.

Average median equivalised income at April 1993 prices for the bottom 20 per cent. of individuals in households of families with children

	1979 £	1988-89 £	1990-91 £
Before housing costs
Excluding free school meals	97	98	95
Including free school meals	100	100	96
After housing costs
Excluding free school meals	80	77	72
Including free school meals	84	79	74

Notes:

1. Income is in equivalised pounds per week.
2. All estimates are subject to sampling error.
3. Families with children include both single parents and couples with children.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Raynsford To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would have been the change in expenditure on housing benefit in 1993-94 broken down between (a) council tenants, (b) housing association tenants and (c) private tenants if (i) the taper had been set at 80 per cent., (ii) all earnings disregards had been halved and (iii) all non-dependant deductions had been doubled.

Mr. Burt: It is not currently possible to disaggregate expenditure on rent allowance between housing association and private sector tenants. Estimated expenditure, for 1993-94, is that housing benefit of £4,920 million will be in respect of council tenants in the form of rent rebates and £3,250 million in respect of housing association tenants and private tenants in the form of rent allowances.

If the housing benefit taper were set at 80 per cent., earnings disregards halved and non-dependant deductions doubled, it is estimated that, in 1993-94, expenditure would be £4,565 million in respect of council tenants in the form of rent rebates and £3,020 million in respect of housing association tenants and private tenants in the form of rent allowances.

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the take-up rate of the disability working allowance since its introduction; what percentage of applications for disability working allowance have been successful; and what percentage of appeals concerning decisions on applications for disability working allowance were successful.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is in the tables.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is in the tables.

Incomes

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the percentage change in income during the period 1979 to the latest date for which information is available before and after housing costs, of each percentile group in the population.

Mr. Burt: Real increases in income between 1979 and 1990-91 for each decile group in the income distribution are provided in the tables; greater disaggregation would not give statistically reliable results. These figures relate to the United Kingdom and are based on income equivalised for household size and composition.

Invalidity Benefit

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give (a) the mean income, at April 1993 prices, of those receiving invalidity benefit, (b) the mean income of those in the poorest two quintiles receving invalidity benefit and (c) the numbers of households in the family expenditure survey to which (a) and (b) separately apply, and the numbers in the population as a whole which these categories represent, on the basis of the latest households below average income analysis, for 1979 and 1990-91.

Mr. Burt: The information is in the tables.

Average equivalised household income of reported invalidity benefit recipients (£ per week, April 1993 prices)

2nd quintile	133	152	113	127
All IVB recipients	141	196	122	178

Notes:
1. IVB recipients include all individuals in benefit units where someone reports receipt of IVB.
2. Average income for all IVB recipients is mean income; for quintile groups median income is used.
3. The quintile averages quoted are the median incomes of IVB recipients in the relevant quintile of the population income distribution.
4. All estimates subject to sampling error.
5. The quintile group results cannot be interpreted as indicating changes in the incomes of IVB recipients; they reflect movements in and out of each overall quintile, as well as changes within a quintile.

2nd Quintile	330	570	300	540
All IVB recipients	1,130	1,940	1,130	1,940

Notes:

1. The populations given are numbers of individuals in benefit units in receipt of IVB. Quintile groups refer to the whole population income distribution.
2. Estimates of IVB recipients are based on reported receipt in the Family Expenditure Survey and will be subject to sampling error.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the number and proportion of invalidity benefit claims in 1992-93 lasting (a) up to six months, (b) six months to one year, (c) one to two years and (d) over two years, broken down by (i) age, (ii) sex and (iii) region.

Mr. Scott: The latest year for which figures are available is 1990-91, but information is not readily available at present. I will write to the hon. Member shortly with such information as is available.

Disability

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 19 July, Official Report, column 71, for how many households of long-term sick and disabled beneficiaries in the bottom quintile of income after housing costs no estimate is provided; and on how many occasions quantile data on income provided by the Central Statistical Office in recent years have not been published when the 95 per cent. confidence intervals of plus 9 to plus 30, minus 7 to plus 15 and plus 12 to plus 36 apply.

Mr. Burt: I will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 19 July, Official Report, column 71, what was the main income at April 1993 prices before and after housing costs, of the poorest quintile and of all households below average income of people who are long-term sick or receiving disability benefits for 1979 and 1990-91.

Mr. Burt: Available estimates are in the table.

Median equivalised household incomes of non-working long-term sick and people declaring receipt of disability benefits (pounds per week).

	1979		1990-91
	BHC	AHC	BHC	AHC
Bottom Quintile	92	76	96	79
Below average income	133	116	160	143

Notes:

1. The Households Below Average Income (HBAI) dataset, the Family Expenditure Survey (FES), does not identify all long-term sick or disabled people and its identification of receipt of disability benefits is imperfect. The estimates are susceptible to those imperfections as well as sampling errors. The results in the tables may, therefore, reflect changes in the categories of long-term sick or disabled people identified in the FES as well as changes in the incomes of such people.
2. Reliable estimates of the mean income of people in the bottom quintile of this group and of those in households below average income are not available. Below average income refers to the population average income in the relevant year.
3. Disability benefits counted here are Invalidity Benefit, Mobility Allowance and Attendance Allowance and Severe Disability Allowance (1990-91) or Non-Contributory Invalidity Pension (1979).

Mobility Equipment Fund

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what arrangements are made for repayments of mobility equipment fund grants; to what extent recipients are offered a choice of lender and terms; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what plans he has to extend means testing to all levels of grants made under the mobility components of the disability living allowance;

(3) what is his policy on means testing grants from the mobility equipment fund exclusively to meet the costs of major adaptions to vehicles for severely disabled recipients of the mobility component of the disability living allowance; whether the higher rate of the mobility component of the disability living allowance is means tested; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what are the criteria according to which Motability awards grants from the mobility equipment fund; and under what arrangements Motability is accountable to his Department for its distribution of the mobility equipment fund;

(5) what is the total of his Department's current provision including motor tax exemption for (a) the mobility component, high rate and (b) the mobility equipment fund.

Mr. Scott: Motability is an independent charity; and it is for it to set the criteria for payments from the mobility equipment fund. Like any other charity which receives funds from Government, it is required to show that such funds are used economically, efficiently and effectively and for the purpose for which they were provided. MEF grants are not repayable.

Any question as to the level of motor tax exemption is one for my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

The higher rate of the mobility component of the disability living allowance is not means tested.

It is expected that, in 1993-94, £2·184 billion will be spent on disability living allowance. Figures are not available to show the proportion within this figure likely to be spent on the higher rate of the mobility component. The contribution from the Department of Social Security to the MEF for 1993-94 is £2 million.

Lone Parents

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lone parents were refused budgeting loans as a percentage of the total number of applicants during the year 1992-93.

Mr. Scott: Social fund data are recorded by application rather than by applicant. In 1992-93, the number of applications for a budgeting loan from lone parents which did not result in an award was 11·4 per cent. of all budgeting loan applications received.

Benefits

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the number of recipients of (a) housing benefit, (b) income support, (c) family credit and (d) invalidity benefit in (i) Inverclyde, (ii) Strathclyde and (iii) Scotland as a whole; and the percentage of the eligible population in each area receiving such benefit in each of the last five years.

Mr. Burt: The administration of social security benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Dr. Norman Godman, dated 26 July 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking what was the number of recipients of (a) housing benefit, (b) income support, (c) family credit and (d) invalidity benefit in (i) Inverclyde, (ii) Strathclyde and (iii) Scotland as a whole; and the percentage of the eligible population in each area receiving such benefit in each of the last five years.

The complete range of information you request is either not available or could only be obtained at a disproportionate cost. This is because statistics are not routinely collected to reflect the numbers of recipients over a given period. The statistics that are available show the number of recipients at a given point in time. In addition, statistics are not routinely collected for Inverclyde and Strathclyde in respect of Income Support, Family Credit and Invalidity Benefit. The figures available are for the Benefits Agency Districts covering these areas and, as the boundaries of these offices do not correspond exactly with those of the Inverclyde and Strathclyde areas, it would require a manual trawl of benefit records to obtain the information. The information that is available is in the attached appendix.

Finally, take-up figures for income related and Invalidity Benefit are not available on a regional basis. Estimates of the take-up of Income Support, Family Credit and the new unified Housing Benefit for Great Britain were published in "Income Related Benefit Estimates of Take-up in 1989" in January this year. Take-up estimates for the income related benefits that were available before the 1988 benefit reforms are for 1985 and 1987 and are provided in Social Security Statistics 1990 (Table 48) and Social Security Statistics (Table H.5) respectively. Copies of these publications are in the Library. Information for Invalidity benefit is not available.

I hope that you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will conduct a survey of waiting times for benefit claimants at benefit centres in England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland and place a copy of the results in the Library.

Mr. Burt: Waiting times in benefit offices are a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. and learned Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Greville Janner, dated 27 July 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security, asking if he will conduct a survey of waiting times for benefit claimants in England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland.

There are no plans to conduct a survey of waiting times for benefit claimants in England, Wales and Scotland. A survey in Northern Ireland is a matter for the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

The Benefits Agency is currently piloting an advanced-caller system that will enable staff to continuously monitor waiting times. The system will also alert staff if a customer has been waiting an unduly long time, or if there is an increase in the number of callers. This enables a decision on whether to deploy more reception staff to be made at an early stage. In addition, most offices now run their reception points as a fast stream service. Customers are seen and wherever possible their enquiries are cleared at the initial reception point.

I place great importance on listening to our customers. The Benefits Agency Customer Charter gives a commitment to actively seek, listen to and act on the views of our customers. Each District in the Agency tests customer opinion at least once a year to find out which aspects of the service are seen as most in need of improvement, so that resources can be targeted appropriately.

The Benefits Agency also commissions a national independent survey of its customers each year. One of the topics covered in the survey concerns the customer's perception of the length of time they have to wait in the office before being seen. A copy of the 1991 survey is in the Library.

I hope that this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Income Support

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the average amount of deductions for recipients of income support who receive the disability premium and have (a) more than one deduction and (b) more than two deductions;

(2) how many recipients of income support are subject to more than (a) one, (b) two or (c) three deductions from their income support; and what is the average amount per person of those deductions;

(3) what is the number and average amount of deductions for recipients of income support who receive the lone parent premium and have (a) more than one deduction and (b) more than two deductions;

(4) what is the number and average amount of deductions for recipients of income support who receive the family premium and have (a) more than one deduction and (b) more than two deductions.

Mr. Burt: I shall write to the hon. Member shortly wth such information as is available.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many income support and unemployment benefit claimants have (a) successfully and (b) unsuccessfully claimed income support under the hardship rules, showing those whose claim was in doubt due to (i) not actively seeking work, (ii) refusing suitable employment and (iii) availability for work for each region and for Great Britain as a whole for each quarter since April 1992.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Ms Clare Short, dated 26 July 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary

Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many income support and unemployment benefit claimants have (a) successfully and (b) unsuccessfully claimed income support under the hardship rules, showing those whose claim was in doubt due to (i) not actively seeking work, (ii) refusing suitable employment and (iii) availability for work for each region and for Great Britain as a whole for each quarter since 1992.

The information has been taken from the Benefits Agency Management Information Statistics and is attached. The number of customers who have successfully or unsuccessfully applied for a hardship payment because they have refused suitable employment are included in the numbers of customers whose claim is in doubt because of their availability for employment. I regret it is not possible to break this figure down.

The figures are based on the Benefits Agency's Territorial structure, which has been in force since April 1991.

I hope that you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average level of deductions from income support excluding current liability for mortgage interest in each year since 1989.

Mr. Burt: The information requested can be obtained from the figures in table 10.1 of volume 1 of the "Department of Social Security Income Support Statistics Annual Statistical Enquiry", May 1989 to May 1992, copies of which are in the Library.

Separate statistics for current liability for mortgage interest were not collected for the years 1989 to 1991 and are only available for May 1992.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list by premium the deductions made from the income support of persons who receive the lower rate of income support for persons aged under 25 years.

Mr. Burt: The numbers of deductions made from the benefit of income support recipients who receive the under 25 years of age rate of income support and who are entitled to a premium are as follows:

	Number
Disability Premium
Community Charge Deduction	1,000
Social Fund Recovery	4,000

Source:
"Income Support Annual Enquiry", May 1992.
Notes:
1. The figures have been rounded to the nearest thousand.
2. Recipients with the lower rate of Income Support for those aged under 25 have been identified on the basis that they are under 25, single and without dependents, and do not therefore qualify for the high rate of benefit.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many recipients of income support are subject to direct payment of mortgage interest for (a) current liability and (b) arrears.

Mr. Burt: The latest information in the form requested is in table 10.1 of volume 1 of "Department of Social Security—Income Support Statistics, Annual Statistical Enquiry", May 1992, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many recipients of income support are having deductions made from their benefit (a) for community charge arrears, (b) fuel bills and (c) social fund repayments; and what percentage of the total number of claimants this represents.

Mr. Burt: The information requested can be obtained from the figures in tables 3.1 and 10.1 of volume 1 of the "Department of Social Security—Income Support Statistics Annual Statistical Enquiry", May 1992, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people were dependent (a) on supplementary benefit in 1979 and (b) on income support in 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: There were 4·4 million claimants, partners and dependants receiving supplementary benefit in 1979. The latest available income support figures are for May 1992, when there were 8·9 million claimants, partners and dependants receiving income support. Comparisons between supplementary benefit and income support are difficult, since the conditions of entitlement and the basis of assessment differ.

Social Fund Loans

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in how many cases in each of the last five years civil enforcement action has been taken in either the county court or the sheriffs' court to enforce the recovery of social fund loans.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a breakdown of the number of deductions made for the recovery of social fund loans from social security benefits other than income support, by benefit.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is in the table.

Number of social fund awards which were repaid from social security benefits (excluding income support) 1992-93

Source of repayment	Number of repayments
Family credit	61,201
Industrial Disablement pension	1,564
Invalid care allowance	2,800
Invalidity benefit	233,850
Maternity allowance	1,646
Reduced earnings allowance	230
Retirement pension	40,456
Severe disability allowance	3,536
Sickness benefit	95,194
Unemployment benefit	3,488,307
War disablement pension	453
War widow's pension	149
Widow's pension	12,421
Widowed mother's allowance	3,414
Total	3,945,221

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of the public bodies for which he is responsible hold meetings in public; and if he will list them.

Mr. Hague: Of the public bodies listed in "Public Bodies 1992", a copy of which is in the Library, the following hold hearings in public, except where the appellant requests a private hearing:

Disability appeal tribunals
Medical appeal tribunals
Social security appeal tribunals
Vaccine damage tribunals
Child support appeal tribunals

Community Care Grants

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a further breakdown of the reasons for refusal of community care grants where direction 4 is not satisfied, referred to in annex 8 of the annual report of the social fund 1992-93.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Residential Care Homes

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether the preserved rights to income support at higher level of very dependent elderly and infirm will be maintained in unregistered residential care homes of fewer than four beds established prior to 1 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: From 1 April, small homes are no longer exempt from the provisions of the Registered Homes Act 1984, and are required to register if they are providing both board and personal care. For the residents to have preserved rights the home must be registered. If a home is not registered, the residents are no longer entitled to the higher levels of income support but can claim normal income support and housing benefit.

Reciprocal Arrangements

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security with how many countries outside the EC Her Majesty's Government have entered into reciprocal social security agreements; and upon what criteria decisions have been taken as to which countries should be covered by such arrangements.

Mr. Hague: The United Kingdom has reciprocal social security agreements with 23 countries outside the EC.

In order to enter into an agreement with the United Kingdom the other country's social security scheme has to be sufficiently similar to provide for reciprocity. There has to be sufficient movement of workers between the two countries to justify the outlay of resources to negotiate, operate and maintain the agreement. Above all, any additional costs have to be affordable.

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for industrial disablement benefit for a prescribed industrial disease were received by the Benefits Agency's South Tyneside district, North Tyne district and Newcastle district offices in the period since January 1991; how many of these claims resulted in medical examinations; what were the outcomes of the examinations concerned; how many appeals were received from claimants against the outcomes; and what were the results of any resultant medical appeal tribunals.

Mr. Scott: The administration of industrial injuries disablement benefit is the responsibility of Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. David Clelland, dated 26 July 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many claims for industrial injuries disablement benefit for a prescribed industrial disease were received by the Benefits Agency's South Tyneside District, North Tyne District and Newcastle District offices in the period since January 1991; how many of these claims resulted in medical examinations; what were the outcomes of the examinations concerned; how many appeals were received from claimants against the outcomes; and what were the results of any resultant medical appeal tribunals.

Information on the number of prescribed disease claims and the subsequent outcome on such claims since January 1991 is not available in the form requested and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. Similarly information on medical examinations and appeals is not to hand. Such information as is available is shown in the tables:

Table 1
Industrial injuries disablement benefit—prescribed disease. New claims in period April 1992 to June 1993

	New claims
Newcastle district	1,293
South Tyneside	3,705
North Tyneside	1,627

The above information is based on a 100 per cent. count of claims received in benefit offices. Prescribed disease claims were not identified separately prior to April 1992.

Table 2
Industrial injuries disablement benefit—prescribed disease new assessments in period October 1992 to June 1993

	New assessments
Newcastle district	25
South Tyneside	109
North Tyneside	9

The information is based on 100 per cent. count of the number of new assessments of Disablement Benefit in benefit offices. Prescribed disease awards were not identified separately prior to October 1992. Some claims made during the period will not have been assessed yet.

I hope that this reply is helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Computer Consultancies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list all the computer consultancies employed by his Department and agencies, since November 1991, the tasks for which they were engaged, and the total cost to his Department.

Mr. Hague: The employment of computer consultancies is a matter for Mr. Ian Magee, the chief executive of the Information Technology Services Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Ian Magee to Mr. John McAllion, dated 23 July 1993:

The Secretary of State has asked me to respond to the Parliamentary Question, tabled by you on 21 July 1993, concerning computer consultancies employed by the Department of Social Security. As Chief Executive of the Information Technology Services Agency, I have responsibility for engaging IT consultants for the Department.

There are a large number of consultancy suppliers employed within the Department of Social Security and the number of individual computer contracts runs into several hundred. If however there is a specific area of work that is of interest to you I will be happy to provide you with further details. The tasks for which they are employed covers all areas of IT including business analysis, software development, technical support and technical innovation. Individual tasks can range from the development of a specific interface between systems, to assistance with the advancement of our open systems strategy. A list of the suppliers of these services is attached.

You also refer to the total cost of this work to the Department. I am unable to provide information on the value of the individual contracts as to do so may be a breach of commercial confidentiality. However, I can say that the value of contracts let between November 1991 and July 1993 is in the region of £87M. I should also explain that some of the more recent contracts do extend beyond this financial year.

Benefits (Leicester)

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the maximum waiting time for (a) claimants, (b) benefits and (c) consultations at each of the benefit centres serving the Leicester, West constituency.

Mr. Burt: The performance of a benefit office is the responsibility of Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. and learned Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Greville Janner, dated 26 July 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security, asking the maximum waiting time for (a) customers, (b) benefits, and (c) consultations at each of the benefit centres serving the Leicester, West constituency.

As you will be aware, your constituency is served by two Benefit Agency Districts, North Leicestershire and South Leicestershire. While there is no specific measurement of waiting times, and it is therefore not possible to answer your question in the form required, the Districts believe that customers are seen, initially, within 15 minutes. Customers waiting for a more detailed interview or payment of benefit may have to wait longer than this and they are generally advised how long this is likely to take. Every effort is made to ensure that customers do not have to wait more than two hours. Both Districts will investigate any instances where this is exceeded.

Consultations with customers are arranged at the customer's convenience, and either conducted immediately or at a place and time convenient to the customer.

I hope you find this answer useful. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many self-employed individuals have been found to be avoiding national insurance contribution payments; and what has been the value of the revenue recovered in each year since 1984-85 (a) in each region and (b) nationally.

Mr. Hague: The administration of national insurance is a matter to Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive of the Contributions Agency. She will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Alan Milburn, dated 26 July 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Contributions Agency I am responsible for answering questions about relevant operational matters. I have been asked to reply to your question about how many self-employed individuals have been found to be avoiding payment of National Insurance Contributions (NICs), and the value of the revenue recovered in each year since 1984-85.

In general, all self-employed people aged between sixteen and pension age are required to pay Class 2 NICs, unless they have applied for, and been granted, an exception from payment on the grounds of small earnings. Where payment is not made arrangements are in place for the contributor to be reminded and if necessary pursued for non-payment. It is the aim of the Agency to obtain current compliance and payment of any arrears at the smallest cost of public funds.

Most people commencing self-employment notify the Agency or the Inland Revenue that they have done so, but we are aware that some do not. In addition, there are some with whom the Agency loses contact if they have changed address and not reported the change. We have no reliable information as to the total numbers who are self-employed and are avoiding payment of NICs. Since April 1991, the Secretary of State has set a High Level Target to identify self-employed people not previously known to the Agency. This target has been increased each year, from 60,000 in the 1991/92 year to 70,000 in the 1992/93 year and 103,000 in 1993/94: in the first two years we have exceeded the target set. Of course, some of the newly-identified self-employed will be earning low amounts and may qualify for exception from payment on the grounds of low income. The important element is, however, that they have become known to the Agency, and may well subsequently be liable to pay Class 2 NICs.

Because of the method of recording our statistical information I cannot supply the information you have asked for in relation to the amount of money recovered from our efforts in the pursuit of unpaid National Insurance debt. However, I have supplied in annexes, which will be tabled in the Library, information on the numbers and amounts involved where proceedings have been undertaken by the Agency or instalment arrangements have been accepted.

When a contributor acknowledges that he or she owes arrears of Class 2 NICs, but is unable to settle the debt by payment of a lump sum, the Agency will consider, in appropriate circumstances, the acceptance of payment of the arrears by instalment. Such an arrangement is always conditional upon the contributor undertaking to pay future Class 2 NICs timeously. An annex to my reply gives details of the instalment arrangements accepted in the years in question.

If necessary, the Agency will pursue unpaid Class 2 NICs by either civil or criminal prosecution and a further annex gives details of the number of prosecutions undertaken and the amounts involved.

I am supplying the figures from 1984-85 (Instalments from 1985-86) on a regional basis and for the 1992-93 year on a national basis. A regional breakdown of the 1992-93 year is not yet available.

I regret that I have been unable to give you the precise information that you requested in your question but I hope that my reply has proved helpful.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 25 June, Official Report, columns 324-25, how many cases of national insurance contributions avoidance have been uncovered; and how much revenue has been recovered in each year since 1984-85.

Mr. Hague: The administration of national insurance is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive of the Contributions Agency. She will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Alan Milburn, dated 26 July 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Contributions agency I am responsible for answering questions about relevant operational matters. I have been asked to reply to your question about how many cases of avoidance have been uncovered and the value of the revenue recovered in each year since 1984-85.

As I explained in my reply to your earlier question, where non-compliance with National Insurance law is uncovered the Agency does not attempt to differentiate between cases involving genuine mistakes and suspected evasion or avoidance of liability.

There are several ways in which the incorrect or non-payment of National Insurance Contributions (NICs) can be discovered including survey visits made by inspectors, examining and processing employers' End of Year Returns, and enquiries made by individual contributors.

Since achieving full Executive Agency status in April 1991 the Contributions agency has been set High Level Targets on the number of surveys undertaken and their subsequent Class 1 yield and on the identification of self employed contributors previously unknown to the Department. The targets and published achievements were as follows:—

Surveys of Employers

Numbers Target
1991-92 88,000 (achieved 106,353)
1992-93 114,000 (achieved 118,032)
1993-94 123,000

Yield Target
£33·8 million (achieved £59·23 million)
£71·24 million (achieved £89·14 million)

I am attaching, as an annex, details for potential arrears going back to 1986-87, identified as a result of survey. Collection of these arrears is largely the responsibility of the Inland Revenue, and figures for the actual amounts recovered are not available.

Self Employed identified

Numbers Target
1991-92 60,000 (achieved 84,040)
1992-93 70,000 (achieved 93,981)
1993-94 110,000

Not all the self-employed identified would have been liable to pay Class 2 NICs in the years in question, so no details of the precise yield can be calculated. But once someone has been brought into the system, their future liability will be monitored.

I hope that the information that I have supplied is useful.

Fraud

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many officers have been involved in investigating social security fraud in (a) local offices and (b) regional teams in each year since 1979.

Mr. Burt: The administration of fraud investigation is the responsibility of Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. John Battle, dated 26 July 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many officers have been involved in investigating social security fraud in (a) local offices and (b) regional teams in each year since 1979.

I regret that I am unable to provide you with all the information you have requested but I hope that you find the following helpful.

The Sector Fraud Organisation has only been in existence since January 1991 and prior to that date staff investigating fraud were provided by the Local Offices when required and were not counted separately. The regional fraud teams ceased to exist when the Sector Fraud Organisation was set up.

The first full year for which figures are available is the year ending 31 March 1992. The number of sector fraud staff in post at that date was 2,742. At the year ending 31 March 1993 there were 2,789 sector fraud staff in post.

In addition to the Sector Fraud Organisation the Benefits Agency also uses discrete teams to investigate organised and multiple claims fraud. In the year ending 31 March 1992 there were 227 staff involved in the prevention and detection of organised and multiple claim fraud. The figure for the year ending 31 March 1993 was 268.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

DNA Tests

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the expected date when figures will be available from the Child Support Agency for the period 1 April 1992 to 31 March 1993 on the number of DNA tests carried out in the pursuit of declarations of paternity in child maintenance cases in England and Wales;

(2) what were the costs to the Child Support Agency of the DNA tests used to establish paternity during the pursuance of a maintenance claim for the year ending March 1992.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Mrs. Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Gareth Wardell, dated 27 July 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Child Support Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking what were the costs to the Agency of the DNA tests used to establish paternity during the pursuance of a maintenance claim for the year ending March 1992, and the expected date when figures will be available for the period 1 April 1992 to 31 March 1993 on the number of DNA tests carried out in pursuit of applications to a Court for a maintenance order in England and Wales. Both periods relate to the time before the Agency was launched.

We estimate that during the period from 1 April 1992 to 31 March 1993, the Department made application to the courts for a declaration of paternity which involved DNA testing in less than 100 cases.

As regards the costs to the Department of DNA tests carried out in 1991-92, my previous letter explained that in the year ending March 1992 DNA testing was an issue in less than 1 per cent. of the 1,000 cases in which the Department made application to the courts for a declaration of paternity. Recovery of the costs for DNA testing were normally sought from the court in the costs they awarded. Before the Department then, or the Agency now, would consider pursuing such a case, the weight of other evidence of paternity would be substantial and the expectation was that most of the cases would be successfully proven and that the full costs would be recovered. In the light of this, and due to their limited nature, figures were not collected on the costs involved in individual DNA testing nor on the total court costs recovered.

I hope you will find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 229

SESSION 1992–93

19th July, 1993—27th July, 1993

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R=first reading, 2R=second reading, Money res=money resolution, Com=Committee stage, Rep=Report stage, 3R=third reading, amendt/amendts=amendment/amendments, *=matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
